35. ———— Estate of maternal grandfather—Daughter. A suit brought by the plaintiff's mother. After A's death, M, a daughter of R, brought a suit on her own behalf against the above-mentioned plaintiffs for possession of her father's estate, but afterwards withdrew her claim. Subsequently S, M's son, who had been born after K's compromise, brought a suit against M and the representatives of H and P to recover possession of the estate, on the allegation that, the family being a divided one, he was entitled, under the Hindu law, to succeed to such estate, and that both the compromise entered into by K and the withdrawal of the former suit by M were in fraud of his succession, and did not affect his rights. The Court of first instance found that the plaintiff was entitled to succeed to the estate, but that, his mother being alive, he was entitled to possession after her death only, and upon these findings gave him a decree declaring his right to possession on M's death. The lower Appellate Court reversed the decree, holding that the compromise entered into by K was conclusive against the plaintiff's claim, and also that, during his mother's lifetime, he had no not entitle him, under ordinary circumstances, to succeed to his maternal grandfather's estate in a divided Hindu family during the existence of a daughter, whether she were his own mother or his maternal aunt; and that the claim for possession was therefore rightly dismissed. *Anantlal Bose v. 149. — Childless daughter—Joint estate—Survivorship. R, holding estates in Bengal jointly with his brothers as an undivided Hindu family, died, leaving a widow, S, and three unmarried daughters, B, S M, and N. On her husband's death, S continued to reside with her brothers, and was supported out of the income of the joint estate. All the daughters married during the lifetime of S, and B became a widow without having had a child. After S's death and during the lifetime of S M, N also became a childless widow. S M died after her mother, leaving a son R K. R K, on attaining majority, sued to recover, with mesne profits, a four-anna share of the ancestral estates to which he claimed to be entitled on his mother's death as heir of R, and from which he alleged he had been dispossessed by the representatives of R's brothers, whom he made defendants in the suit, joining B and N with them as co-defendants. Held, that B, being a childless widow at the time of her mother's death, could take no interest in her father's estate. Held, also, that on their mother's death S M and N, as heirs of their father, took a joint estate in his succession, and on S M's death the estate which had come to her and N jointly survived to N, since the fact of the latter being at that time a childless widow did not destroy the right of survivorship which she had previously acquired by inheritance. AMTOLALL BOSE v. A deed executed by a Hindu in favour of his future wife conveyed immovable property to her, "her heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns" on the condition that, if she died "without leaving issue of the intended marriage, who shall succeed to a vested interest" in the property, and without exercising a power of appointment given her by the deed, then "the property shall vest in her legal heirs, according to the Hindu law of the Bombay School." Held, that she took an absolute estate of inheritance in the property. The true construction of placitum 30 of Chapter IV, s. 10 of the Vyavahara Mayukha, and one that brings it into harmony with the Mitakshara, and also reconciles it with placitum 28, is that it should be read distributively as regards the property of women married according to one of the approved forms and the property of those married in one of the lower forms. In the one case those of the heirs enumerated by Brihaspati, who are blood relations of the husband, namely, the husband's sister's son, the husband's brother's son, and the husband's brother will succeed to the husband's family, or the nearest to her in her father's family, as the case may be. The list is not exhaustive, and neither a co-widow nor any other sapinda of the husband is excluded. The words "and the rest" mean or include the other relations of the husband or father. The co-widow therefore takes in her right place and is a preferential heir to the husband's brother or husband's brother's son. Bai Kisserbai v Hunsraj Morari (1906)

12. ———— Mitakshara law—Illegitimate daughters. The illegitimate offspring of a kept woman or continuous concubine amongst Sudras are on the same level as to inheritance as the issue of a female slave by a Sudra. Under the Mitakshara law, the son of a female slave by a Sudra takes the whole of his father's estate, if there be no sons by a wedded wife, or daughters by such a wife, or sons of such daughters. If there be any such heirs, the son of a female slave will participate to the extent of half a share only. Held, therefore, that M, the illegitimate son of an Ahir by a continuous concubine of the same caste, took his father's estate in preference to the daughters of a legitimate son of his father who died in the father's lifetime. *SARSUTI v. ant's husband had recovered possession of the estate from the widow of the prior possessor, J D. The lower Court found that the plaintiff was an

law regulating the devolution of indivisible ancestral property, which had vested in the last possessor. That the objection to the plaintiff's title as heir by the general law was thus reduced to the questions: Whether his alleged kinship to the last possessor was proved; and if so, whether, according to the ordinary course of legal succession to such property, he, or the defendant, as the widow of the last possessor, was heir to the estate. That upon the first question plaintiff had proved his kinship to the last possessor, and upon the second that plaintiff was heir to the estate, in preference to the defendant, the widow of the last possessor. The sound rule to lay down with respect to undivided or impartible ancestral property is that all the members of the family who, in the way pointed out, are entitled to unity of possession and community of interest, according to the law of partition, are co-heirs, irrespective of their degrees of agnate relationship to each other, and that, on the death of one of them leaving a widow and no near sapindas in the male line, the family heritage, both partible and impartible, passes to the survivors or survivor, to the exclusion of the widow. But when her husband was the last survivor, the widow's position as heir, relatively to his other undivided kinsmen, is similar to her position with respect to his divided or self and separately acquired property. *YENUMULA GAVURIDEVANNA GARU v. She also alleged that plaintiff should have become a party to an appeal pending before the Privy Council from the decree in suit No. 3 of 1860, under which the defendant's husband had recovered possession of the estate from the widow of the prior possessor, J. D. The lower Court found that the plaintiff was an undivided member of the family in which the right to the estate was vested, and a descendant of the defendant's late husband in the 12th degree through

D.*, the common ancestor, through whom plaintiff traced his kinship, and has ever since enjoyed as ancestral property derived from the said B. D. That accordingly the question of succession raised in this suit, similarly to that in the appeal before the Privy Council, was determinable by the law regulating the devolution of indivisible ancestral property, which had vested in the last possessor. That the objection to the plaintiff's title as heir by the general law was thus reduced to the questions: Whether his alleged kinship to the last possessor was proved; and if so, whether, according to the possessor, and upon the second that plaintiff was heir to the estate, in preference to the defendant, the widow of the last possessor. The sound rule to lay down with respect to undivided or impartible ancestral property is that all the members of the family who, in the way pointed out, are entitled to unity of possession and community of interest, according to the law of partition, are co-heirs, irrespective of their degrees of agnate relationship to each other, and that, on the death of one of them leaving a widow and no near sapindas in the male line, the family heritage, both partible and impartible, passes to the survivors or survivor, to the exclusion of the widow. But when her husband was the last survivor, the widow's position as heir, relatively to his other undivided kinsmen, is similar to her position with respect to his divided or self and separately acquired property. *YENUMULA GAYURIDEVAMMA GARU v. Inherited alone the impartible zamindari. On her death, the elder daughter's son, in litigation ending in 1881, made good his title to the impartible zamindari, being the descendant in the elder line. Held, that this son of the elder daughter became, as the last male owner, the stock from which descent had now to be traced, and that the ancestor was no longer that stock. And held, that the son of this last male owner had a title to the zamindari on his father's death in consequence of the full and complete ownership of the latter, who had himself become a fresh root of title. This decision disposed of the only question that was argued on this appeal. But the decision of the Courts below that the plaintiff could not claim the inheritance in virtue of survivorship was also affirmed. The judgment below, on this part of the case, was based on this, that no family co-parcenary had existed to give rise to survivorship, as the sons of daughters could not form a family co-parcenary, which could only consist of the descendants of a paternal ancestor. *MUTTUVAIDUGANADHA TEVAR v. —Primogeniture—Custom. The principles on which is founded the judgment in Ramalakshmi Ammal v. Sivonantha Perumal Ammal, 14 Moo. I. A. 570, as to the succession to an impartible inheritance, apply with equal force, whether the first-born son is born of a first married wife or of a wife afterwards married. The text of Manu, Ch. IX, v. 125, distinctly shows that among sons born of wives equal in their class, and without any other distinction, there can be no seniority in right of the mother. In v. 122 of the same chapter the words "but of a lower class" added by the gloss of Cullaena Bhatta are to be read as correctly inserted in the text. Two wives of a Patayagar of an impartible poliem having died before his marriage with a third and fourth wife, it was contended holding a precarious possession of the palayam until 1783, when he supported the East India Company. In 1785, he was replaced in possession, as a "renter," but upon failure to pay the palayam was placed under the control of a manager until the country was restored to the Nawab. In 1790, the East India Company again assumed control of the country, and the palayagar again held possession of the estate as a "renter" under the Company. In 1792, the palayagar died, he being the same palayagar who had been expelled in 1765. He was succeeded by his son, who died in 1801, the year in which the Company took possession of the country, leaving a younger brother of the half-blood him surviving. The Government, in 1802, declared its intention of appointing the half-brother to succeed to the palayam on a zamindari tenure, and subsequently directed that the half-brother should be instated in the palayam as soon as a sanad of investiture could be prepared. The question of restoration was however kept reiterating its intention to restore the palayagar to the management of his palayam under a new arrangement, proposed to grant him a joghur bringing in an average of thirty-three per cent. of the gross collections, and subject to a nominal rental assessment. This proposal was consented to by the palayagar; but the arrangement was again varied, the palayagar receiving ten per cent. of the gross collections. In 1817, instructions were issued to the effect that villages should be given over to the palayagar of a value equal to the average gross amount of his then income, from whatever source derived. It was also declared that the villages were to be given on zamindari tenure. The approval of the Government having been obtained, a conditional sanad was granted in December 1817, and the half-brother of the last palayagar was put in possession. The first defendant, in whose possession the zamindari was at the date of suit, was a descendant from the palayagar last referred to, tracing his descent from the family of the grantee of the sanad, by his second wife. Plaintiff and second defendants were descendants from the family of the grantee by his third wife. Plaintiff now sued for partition, when the plea was raised that the zamindari had been from its origin an impartible estate, and that the sanad granted in 1817 had not altered the incident of impartibility which had always attached to it; Held, that the estate was impartible. enquiries were made of members of the zamindar's family and other persons connected with the zamindari as to the nature of the estate, and their recorded answers showed that they understood the estate to be impartible, and that it descended to a single heir. Held, (i) that the pottam was impartible; (ii) that the plaintiff was entitled to decree for a monthly payment to him of Rs60 for his maintenance. The plaintiff's claim extended to certain pannai lands within the limits of the zamindari; some of which had been handed down from zamindar to zamindar since 1831, others having been purchased by the plaintiff's father. The High Court found that they had been recognized and dealt with as part and parcel of the zamindari. Held, that the pannai lands were impartible, and the plaintiff was not entitled to a share in them or in the cattle, etc., used for cultivating them. The plaintiff further claimed a sum of Rs4,000, the amount of a loan alleged to have been contracted by him for the purposes of his marriage. ## 13. JOINT PROPERTY AND SURVIVORSHIP.

1. Joint property—Succession per capita and per stirpes. Where property is acquired while a Hindu family is joint according to the Bengal law, the inheritance goes per capita and not per stirpes. KANGUTTY DOSI v. NUNDO COOMAR DOSI 2 W. R. 11

RUTUN KRISTO BOSOO v. BRUGOBAN CHUNDER BOSOO 18 W. R. 32

2. Mitakshara law—Joint and self-acquired property. A Hindu subject to the Mitakshara dying possessed of a share in joint family property and also of separately acquired property, the two will not necessarily devolve on the same heir; but they may either descend to different persons, or, if descending to the same persons, may descend in a different way and with different consequences. PITUM KOONWAR alias MUNAR BISSIE v. JOY KISHEN DASS 0 W. R. 101

3. Separate enjoyment of self-acquired property—Succession to self. If a Hindu, his property, by the law current,

But, however this may be, a tenant-right of occupancy is on a different footing from property which is exclusively the estate of a deceased ascetic, and the principles which govern the hereditary right of succession to a tenant-right of occupancy are such as an ascetic, if he conform to the spirit of his religion, cannot carry out. SOOREJ KUMAR PERSHAD v. widow succeeded to the estate the sons being disqualified from inheriting. Later on C married and a son was born to him. The widow thereafter sold the property of the plaintiffs, who now sued to recover possession from the wife and son of C. It was contended for the defendants that the widow succeeding to her husband, took only a widow's estate and that that estate was divested by the after-born son of C. Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to succeed. Both in fact and in contemplation of law C's son had no existence when the estate vested in the widow; and his subsequent birth could not divest the estate. Held, that C's son stood in no better position than would have been occupied by his father C, if the latter's disqualification had been removed after the widow had succeeded to the inheritance; and in that case the widow's title would prevail, inasmuch as it was superior to C's, while his disqualification endured. *PAWADEWA v. Suit for share in joint property. In a suit to establish the plaintiff's right to a share in joint properties belonging to a family subject to the Mitakshara law, where a part of the property sued for was admitted to be joint—Held, that the presumption of Hindu law was that the residue of the property was also joint, and that the onus lay with the defendants to prove separate acquisition without the aid of joint funds. Where the members of a Hindu family are living in a joint family-house, enjoying in common the produce of part of the joint property, the separate possession by any member of a specific portion of the joint property ought not to be treated as an exclusive or adverse possession against the other members. *HEERA LALL ROY v. 62. ——— Evidence of separate acquisition. The plaintiff sued for partition of certain property, alleging it to be joint family property. It consisted of a house in Bombay and certain fields at Vavia in the Thana District, outside the jurisdiction of the Court. As to the house in Bombay, the first defendant alleged that it was his self-acquired property; that he had purchased it in his own name in 1863 out of his private funds; that there were no family funds, and that neither his father nor his brothers (the latter of whom were then very young) were in a position to contribute anything towards the purchase; that by his invitation his father and brother had lived with him in the house, that his father had died then and that one of his brothers had subsequently left the house and with his family had gone to reside elsewhere; that the plaintiff (the youngest brother of the first defendant) had continued to occupy a room in the house by the first defendant's permission up to the date of suit. The plaintiff, on the other hand, relied on the fact that the house was purchased and used as a family residence, while the father and sons were all living in union; that it was bought in the name of the eldest son (defendant No. 1), who was then the manager of the family; that the father lived and died there; and that he himself (the plaintiff) and his family had continued to live there, even after he had separated in food from his brother (defendant.

No. 1). Held, that the house was liable to partition. No doubt, the onus of proof was upon the plaintiff. The facts, however, proved by him or admitted by the first defendant raised a strong presumption that the house was family property, and against it there was only the first defendant's statement that the house was bought with his own money. But there was nothing to show that he kept a private fund apart from the family funds. He was the manager of the family and he kept no separate accounts. BALARAM BHASKARJI v. In their plaint they alleged that the family was still joint. By their evidence, however, they set up a separation between themselves and H shortly after the death of P. The defendants, on the other hand, alleged that some twenty or twenty-five years before suit, after the death of M, there had been a separation between the plaintiffs on the one side and P and H on the other. Held, that, the plaintiffs having set up a case which was inconsistent with the presumption of the family remaining joint, it was for them to

So, too, when it is admitted or proved that partition has already taken place, the presumption is that it has been a complete partition, and it lies upon a person alleging that family property, in the exclusive possession of one of the members of the family after such partition, is liable to be partitioned, to make good his allegation by proof. Whilst on the one hand there were certain instruments by which the grantors purported to deal with it as if it were separate estate, there were, on the other hand, a series of family books and various contracts and transactions inconsistent with anything but joint property. But over and above this, the tenor of family life proved the use of the property to have been the same after as before the execution of those instruments. A case of adverse possession by a co-parcener cannot be established by mere paper assertions not brought home to the knowledge of the other co-parceners, when there has been no actual exclusion of the latter from use and enjoyment for the period of limitation. ANANDRAO GUNFUTRAO v. Such presumption is liable to be rebutted by means other than enquiring as to the source from which the purchase-

each member carried on business separately, and that the property was thenceforward in the exclusive possession, and used for the business, of the member in whose name it had been purchased, is evidence sufficient to rebut the presumption that the property was joint. BHOLANATH MAHTA v. Some of the property in the defendant's hands consisted of his earnings as manager of a mill and of the investments of such earnings. The mill had been established in 1860, and the defendant brought thirty-nine shares out of the ancestral funds in his hands. He was appointed chairman of the company, and managed the mill for ten years without any remuneration. His management was very successful, and good dividends were declared every year from 1863. In 1870 he declined to work any longer without remuneration and at a meeting of the shareholders he was appointed managing director, and was granted a commission on all sales effected by the company. Held, that the commission so received by the defendant was his self-acquired property. Under the circumstances, it might safely be inferred that he did not obtain the appointment of manager by the direct influence of the shares which he held in the company. The gratuitous services which he had for years rendered to the shareholders had influenced them in giving him the appointment, and such influence could not be said to have been created by the direct instrumentality of the ancestral property. agreement being ancestral under the agreement and will, they (the plaintiffs) were entitled not only to them, but to all the accumulations and accretions thereof, which amounted in value to about ten lakhs of rupees. The University, on the other hand, contended that the accumulations and accretions formed part of the self-acquired property of the testator, and went to the University under the residuary clause of the will. Held (TYABJI, J.), (i) that the effect of the agreement was to make the property specified in Part I of the schedule thereto ancestral property as between the parties to the agreement (ii) That the agreement was confirmed by the will and was binding on the executors. (iii) That, although the corpus of the said property became ancestral under the agreement, the accumulations and accretions thereof did not; they were the self-acquired property of the testator, and passed to the trustees under the residuary clause of the will. The plaintiffs had subsequently to the death of M taken possession of the properties in question and had paid probate duty on them. The plaintiffs had taken conveyances from the executors and had given releases to the executors, and in a previous suit (No. 670 of 1892) the first plaintiff had in his evidence stated that he did not wish to dispute the will, and that he had elected to 'take under it' Held, that by their conduct the plaintiffs had elected to take the properties in question under the will, and could not maintain a suit for an account of the rents and profits either under or in opposition to the will. Held, also, that the sons of the plaintiffs (the minor defendants) were bound by the acts of the plaintiffs. The property in question was not really ancestral. It was only such for the purpose and by virtue of the agreement of 28th June 1881, and the plaintiffs were entitled to waive it or rescind it if they pleased, and their sons could not prevent them from doing so. *TRIBHOVANDAS MANGALDAS v. HINDU LAW—JOINT FAMILY—*contd.*2. NATURE OF, AND INTEREST IN, PROPERTY—contd.(a) ANCESTRAL PROPERTY—contd.

three things there is a common subject—property; but it is qualified in three different ways. The joint property of the English law is property held by any two or more persons jointly, and its characteristic is survivorship. Analogies drawn from it to joint-family property are false or likely to be false for several reasons. The essential qualification of the second class is not jointness only, but a good deal more. Two complete strangers may be joint tenants, according to English law; but in no conceivable circumstances could they constitute a joint Hindu family, or, in that capacity, hold property. In the third case, property is qualified in a two-fold manner; it must have been joint-family property and it must be ancestral. There must have been a nucleus of joint-family property before ancestral joint-family property can come into existence, because the word ancestral connotes descent and therefore pre-existence. B—because it is true that there can be no joint ancestral family property without a previous nucleus of joint-family property, it is not true that there cannot be joint-family property, without a pre-existing nucleus, for that would be identifying joint-family property, with ancestral joint-family property. Where there is ancestral joint-family property every member of the family acquires by birth an interest in it, which cannot be defeated by individual alienation or disposition of any kind. This is equally true of joint-family property. Where it is known or admitted that some at least of the property of a joint-family has come down to them the presumption is that the whole property is ancestral, and any member alleging that it is not will have to prove his self-acquisition. Where property is admitted or proved to be joint-family property, it is subject to exactly the same legal incidents in every respect as property which is admitted or proved to be ancestral joint-family property. Further, this class of property in India differs radically in origin and essential characteristics from the joint property of the English law. The fundamental principles of the Hindu joint-family is the tie of sapindaship. Without that it is impossible to form a joint Hindu family. With it as long as a family is living together it is almost impossible not to form a joint Hindu family. There is nothing either in practice or theory which excludes the possibility of members of the same family starting a family fortune holding it as members of a joint family, and thereby clothing

of the gains, and not the general elementary education which is the stepping-stone to the acquisition of all science. Consequently, the property acquired by a Subordinate Judge who had received elementary education at the family expense, but a knowledge of law and judicial practice without such aid, is impartible. The ruling of the Privy Council in Luzimon Rao Sudashev v. Mullar Rao Daye, 2 Knapp 60, interpreted to mean no more than that law as now settled, viz., that when there is ancestral property by means of which other property may have been acquired, then it is for the party alleging self-acquisition to prove that it was acquired without any aid from the family estate. *Bai Mancha v. If they did so, the property would thereupon become joint property. Held, also, that, the plaintiffs having held out K as the manager of

The arrangement being of such an extraordinary character as to leave it in the power of each member to draw to an unlimited extent upon the assets of the firm, the Privy Council declined to extend the operation of such an agreement one iota beyond its terms, and were therefore of opinion that the High Court was right in drawing a distinction between pledging the credit of the firm and drawing out money actually belonging to the firm. NEERUNGHE DOSS v. In a suit on a promissory note executed by the defendant in favour of a firm whose original partners were two brothers, one of whom had previously died leaving an infant son surviving, while the other, who also had infant sons, was, at the date of the execution of the note, sole surviving partner of the firm—Held, that a Hindu infant, who by birth or inheritance becomes entitled to an interest in a joint family business, does not necessarily become a member of the trading partnership carrying on the business. There must be some consent act to that effect on the part of the infant and his partners. Even, therefore, where parties are governed by the Mitakshara law, an infant need not be joined as a co-plaintiff in a suit by the father to recover a trade debt. He then became a partner in the firm, if he had not been so already. The mortgagee filed a suit and obtained a decree on the mortgage, in execution of which the land was put up for sale and purchased by plaintiff. The nephew was not made a party to that suit. A died, whereupon the nephew instituted a suit for partition against A's sons: plaintiff was not a party to that suit. The matters in dispute therein were referred to arbitrators, who held that the mortgage which A had executed was binding on the nephew, and charged his share with a half of it. They also awarded the nephew certain land, being part of the land which had been purchased by plaintiff. Plaintiff now sued to recover the land so awarded to the nephew, but adduced no evidence to show that the mortgage executed by A was binding on the nephew, beyond proving the award by the arbitrators: Held, that, although the decree which had been passed in accordance with the award of the arbitrators in the partition suit was binding as between the nephew and the other members of the family, it could not be used in the present suit as evidence that the debt was for a family purpose binding on the nephew; and that, there being no other evidence, the suit failed. *KANUNA REDDI v. 21. — Document executed by eldest brother on understanding that all would join—Proposed agreement with all members of Hindu family—Agreement not perfected—Execution of document by eldest brother upon understanding that all would join—Refusal by younger brothers to execute—Suit on document dismissed Plaintiff sued two brothers and the minor son of the elder of them on a hypothecation bond, which recited that it was executed by the elder on his own behalf and on behalf of his minor son, and by his two brothers (one of whom was now deceased) on their own behalf, respectively. In fact, it was signed only by the eldest, for himself and for his son, the other brothers having refused to execute it when asked to do so. The defence was that no suit could be brought on the document, inasmuch as it was not completed; and the younger of the two surviving brothers further contended that the loan had not been contracted for his benefit; that the eldest brother had not executed the bond on his behalf; and that he had never agreed to execute it himself. The document separately named each of the three brothers as parties; they were not described as being undivided, and the eldest was described as only representing his son. Held, that the document constituted merely a proposed agreement which had never been perfected; the plaintiff having contracted and the eldest brother intended that all the members of the family should execute the document, it could not take effect, by reason that the person who had alone executed it the family for a declaration that the shares belonged to them, and that they had a right to have them transferred to their names in the company's books. Held, without deciding whether illegitimate daughters were entitled to simple maintenance from the family property, that in any case R as manager could not alienate the shares for that purpose, as there were no emergent circumstances requiring it. *PANVATI v. She mortgaged the family property without the sanction of the Court, as required by s. 14 of the Act. Held, that the mortgages were invalid as regards the lunatic's interest in the property, but as regards the interest of the minors, which was vested in them at the time of the mortgages, the property being ancestral, the mortgages were binding if made for family purposes. *ANURUBAI v. It will be sufficient for him to show that the family was in chronic need of money for the current outgoings of the family life or its trade necessities, and that the moneys were advanced on the representation of the manager that they were needed for such objects. And if the fair inference to be drawn from all the circumstances of the case leaves no doubt that the moneys were borrowed for family reasons, the plaintiff is entitled to succeed, although he is not able to indicate the particular purpose for which such sum has been borrowed. *KAISHNA RAMAYA NAIK v. In 1882 the plaintiff brought the present suit against the defendant, in which he prayed for a decree giving him possession of the said room on the terms of the decree passed in 1877. The defendant alleged that the house in question was not the joint property of his uncles Sadoba and Raghoba, but that his father Sambhapa was the sole owner; that his uncles Sadoba and Raghoba and his brother Rajaram had no right to mortgage it, and that the money was not required for family necessity. He contended that the decree of 1877 was not binding on him, and, further, that the present suit was barred. Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree against the defendant. There was nothing to show that at the date of the mortgage in 1875 the defendant was not still a member of the same joint family with Rajaram into which he had been born. In the mortgage transaction all the branches of the family were represented by their eldest members, and the mortgagee (the plaintiff) might reasonably which his father had bought for him before his death. D had two sons, viz., M, born in 1816, and H, born in 1819. At the end of the year 1850, D and his two sons came to Bombay, where D continued to practice medicine and established a dispensary. In 1862, having saved Rs.5,000 by his medical practice, he set up business as a merchant, and acquired a considerable fortune. His two sons, M and H, who were joint with him, assisted him in his business. On the 7th October 1882, M separated from his father and brother and received as his share of the property a sum of Rs.6,000 and jewels and clothes worth about Rs.5,000. On the same day M the 16th October 1882, M died leaving the plaintiff, his son, him surviving. The plaintiff in this suit contended that the whole of the said property was ancestral property in the hands of M and as such came to him (the plaintiff) unaffected by the will. The defendants contended that the property previously to the division was the joint, but not the ancestral, property of M, his father, and brother; that it was property earned by the joint exertions of D and his sons, that at the division in October 1882, the portion taken by M was his self-acquired property, and that he was entitled to dispose of it by will. Held, that whether, previously to the division in October 1882, the joint property of D and his two sons was ancestral or not, as soon that it was acquired by the equal exertions of the father and his two sons. The father contributed the nucleus of Rs.5,000, and on that nucleus the property was formed by the joint exertions of himself and his sons. The portion, therefore, that came to M did not represent the equivalent of his own exertions only. It represented also a portion of the father's original capital. The property thus being ancestral in the hands of M, he could not, in the town of Bombay, dispose of it by will, even though it consisted of moveables, to the prejudice of the plaintiff's rights. CHATTERHOOD MEORJI v. Possession under such a relinquishment was not a new and separate acquisition. No question upon the law of limitation can arise between the different members of the joint family in respect of the property thus held by a single member. An estate so possessed, free from present co-parcenary rights in others, is not entirely at the disposal of the holder for his own purposes. The possessor has only the qualified powers of disposition of a member of a joint family, with such further powers, or it may be with such restrictions, as spring from the peculiar character of his ownership. These powers fall short of a right of absolute alienation of the estate. PAREYASAMI alias KOTTAI TEVAR v. SALUCKAI TEVAR alias OYYA TEVAR . . . 8 Mad. 157

As to ancestral estate under the Mitakshara, so long as the estate is undivided and the share of a member of the family is indefinite, he cannot dispose of it without the consent of his co-parceners. Held, that in a joint family a nephew, having taken by survivorship the undivided share of an uncle, deceased, was entitled to recover that share from a purchaser, to whom the uncle in his lifetime had sold it without the consent of his co-parceners and without necessity. Held, also, that the purchaser could have no lien on the share for return of the purchase money. As soon as partition is made—actual partition not being in all cases essential, as, for instance, where the family has agreed to hold their estate in definite shares, or a member's undivided share, in execution of his creditor's decree, has been attached—that will be regarded as sufficient to support the alienation of a member's interest, as if it had been his acquired property. As regards members of a family living at the time when their alienation was set aside at the instance of another member, the Court, in Mahabier Persad v. Ramayad Singh, 12 B. L. R. 90, justly ordered that the property should be thenceforth possessed in defined shares, and that the shares of the members who had joined in the sale should be subject to a lien for the return of the purchase money. confirmation of possession, and in the alternative that if the mortgage-bond was valid the amount due thereunder and chargeable on mouzah Pipra might be determined, and the plaintiffs declared entitled to redeem upon payment of such amount:—Held, that, although A and B had no authority, without the consent of their co-sharer C, to mortgage their undivided shares to J and I, yet as the plaintiffs derived their title from those mortgagors, they were not entitled to recover such shares without paying to H, who by his auction-purchase had acquired the rights of the mortgagors, the money advanced on the mortgage-bond of 1872 with interest, and that the same was a charge on such shares. *Mahabier Persad v. The purchaser becomes a sort of tenant in common with the co-parceners, admissible as such to his distributive share upon a partition taking place. (ii) Such an alienation before partition does not deprive the alienating co-parcener of his rights in the joint family. (iii) As the purchaser does not by the death of the vendor lose his right to a partition, so his position is not improved by the death of the other co-parceners before partition. Where property belongs to a father and son governed by the Mitakshara law, the son's interest vests at birth and is saleable. The son may obtain a partition and separate possession of his share of ancestral property, and his share, once partitioned, will be liable to sale. There is, therefore, no reason why the interest of the son in the property while undivided should not be sold in satisfaction of his debts, but in such case the purchaser should bring a suit to obtain partition of the property. *JALLIDAR SINGH v. attache being claim, prayed share might be released from attachment. Prior to that suit, the attached property had been sold, but the sale was limited to the right, title, and interest of the father in the joint property; however, in suit No 33 of 1872, the Court, having decreed a partition, further entertained the question as between the sons and the creditor of the father "whether the attachment of the rest of the family property specified in the plaint ought not, in respect of plaintiff's shares, to be cancelled," and decreed it in favour of the creditor on the ground that the debt had been contracted for purposes binding on the family, and further decided that the property so under attachment ought to be sold to discharge the debt, and it was sold accordingly. Subsequently to the decree for partition, and when the defendants were divided from their father, S D (who was the sole judgment-debtor in suit No 28 of 1871), the house and lands now in issue, which formed no part of the property mortgaged for the debt, the subject of suit No 28 of 1871, were attached and sold and bought by the father of the present plaintiffs. The question in the present suits was whether the properties last mentioned, not having been attached in execution of the decree in the High Court (MORGAN, C.J., INNES and KINDERSLEY, JJ.), affirming the decree of the Court of first instance, that these properties were not so liable; that under the decree and execution proceedings in suit No 28 of 1871 merely the rights of S D were sold; that nothing in that litigation indicated that it was intended to enforce the debt against the whole property as a debt due from the family, and that the decision in the partition suit (No. 33 of 1872) covered only what was then in question, and could not be viewed as authorizing the attachment of the items of property now in question in execution of that decree. That the present suits were therefore rightly dismissed. By INNES, J.—That the prayer of the plaintiffs (the sons) in suit No. 33 of 1872, so far as it related to the removal of the attachment in execution of the decree in suit No. 28 of 1871, should have been at once granted. That the creditor in suit No 28 of 1871 had elected to sue the father alone, and that, though it might have been open to him (the creditor) to have so framed his suit as to have obtained a decree making the joint family liable in person and property having failed to do so, he could not afterwards seek

Undivided family property is not, in the hands of surviving co-parceners, generally speaking, liable to separate debts of a deceased co-parcener. Where therefore a Hindu, undivided in estate from his father, died separately indebted to the plaintiffs, who obtained a decree against the father and wife of the deceased, as his legal heirs and representatives to recover, from the estate and effects of the deceased, the amount of their debt and costs, and sought, in satisfaction of the decree, to attach a shop which during the lifetime of the deceased and subsequently to his death had been in the possession of his father, there being no proof of any separate estate of the deceased having devolved upon his fore the plaintiffs could not render the shop available for their claim. In the Bombay Presidency the share of one of the co-parceners in a Hindu undivided family in the ancestral estate may, before partition, be seized and sold in execution for his separate debt in his lifetime. Such a co-parcener cannot, however, by simple voluntary gift or by devise, alienate his share to a stranger, so as to bind his surviving co-parceners after his decease. The purchaser, mortgagee, or other alienee, for valuable consideration, of such an unascertained share, cannot, before partition, insist upon the possession of any particular portion of the undivided family estate. The mortgagee or purchaser of a share in the undivided ancestral estate of a Hindu possession of such portion can, on partition be given to the mortgagee or purchaser, without injustice to prior encumbrancers or to co-parceners, it is this

The attachment of a parcener's share in the family property under an ordinary money-decree should go against the share, right, title, and interest of the judgment-debtor in such parts of the family property (naming and describing them) as the judgment creditor can specify, and against his share, right, title, and interest in all other parts of the family pro-

40. ————— Mortgage of family property by father—Decree against father enforcing mortgage—Decree for money against father—Sale in execution of decree—Rights of sons. The members of a joint Hindu family brought suits in which they respectively prayed for decrees that their respective proprietary rights in certain ancestral property might be declared, and that their interests in such property, which were about to be sold in execution of two decrees against their father, might be exempted from such sale. One of these decrees was for enforcement of a hypothecation by the plaintiff's father of the property in suit. It was admitted on behalf of the plaintiffs in connection with this decree that, although the judgment-debtor was a person of immoral character, the creditor had no means of knowing that the moneys advanced by him were likely to be applied to any other purpose than that for which they were professedly borrowed, namely, for the purpose of an indigo factory in which the family had an interest. Held, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to any declaration in respect of the execution-proceedings under the decree for enforcement of hypothecation. The second of the decrees above referred to was a simple money-decree for the principal and interest due upon a handi executed by the father in favour of the decree-holder. The suit terminating in that decree was brought against the father alone, and the debt was treated as his separate debt. Held, that the creditor's remedy was to have brought his suit, if he desired to obtain a decree which could execute against the family property and not against the father's interest only, and if he could maintain such suit, either against those members of the family against

Sale of joint family property in execution of decree, as the result of a mortgage by managing member—Liability of shares of members of family not parties to the decree. Although some of the members of a joint family had not been made parties to a suit upon a mortgage effected by the managing members, the entire family estate was bound by the act of the latter, and passed at the sale in execution of a decree upon the mortgage. Whether the shares of all were bound depended on the authority of those who executed the mortgage. By this authority they had to raise money to pay a debt owed by the family as joint members of an ancestral trading firm. The managing members of a joint trading family, having purported to mortgage the family estate, to pay a debt due by the firm were sued upon it by the mortgagee, who afterwards purchased the property at the execution sale. In a suit brought by the latter against the other members of the family to obtain a declaration that he had purchased the entire family estate, the defendants, without showing that the mortgage did not validly bind the family estate, contended that, not having been made parties to the suit, they were not affected by the decree, and their shares had not passed at the sale in execution. Held, that, as the defence was substantially on the latter ground only though there was every opportunity given to the defendants to raise the former ground also, the suit need not be remanded; and that the whole estate had passed to the purchaser *Nanomi Babuasin v. governed by the Mitakshara law seeks to set aside his father's alienations of ancestral property, if the alienees are purchasers at Court-sales held in execution of decrees against the father, it is not enough for him to show that the debts, for which the decrees were passed, were contracted by the father for immoral purposes, it must also be shown that the auction-purchasers had notice that the debts were so contracted. The points to be determined in such case are—(i) What was the interest that was bargained for and paid for by the purchaser? Was it the father's interest only, or was it the interest of the entire family? (ii) Were the debts for which the decrees were obtained, under which the property was sold, contracted for immoral purposes? and (iii) Had the purchaser notice that the debts were so contracted? *Suroj Bunsu Koer v. In a suit by the sons of M and S and several other members of the family for recovery of their interests in the property:—Held, that there was no debt "antecedent" to the decree in this case: that even if the right to obtain damages for the theft or misappropriation could be said to have created a "debt," the debt was tainted with illegality or immorality, the sons were not under a pious duty to pay the debt, and the interests of the sons did not pass by the sale. Held, also, that the purchasers in this case were not entitled to the equities of a bonâ fide purchaser, as the decree, if examined, would have put them upon inquiry. *PAREMAN DASS v. been a wrongful withholding of the maintenance to which he is entitled. Jiti v. Rami, I. L. R. 3 Bom. 207, and Mahalakshamma v. Venkataratnamma, I. L. R. 6 Mad. 53, followed. MALLIKARJUNA PRASADA NAIDU v. DURGA PRASADA NAIDU, I. L. R. 17 Mad. 382

6. ———— Suit to recover arrears of maintenance due under a personal decree and to establish a charge for future maintenance on the family property. A Hindu widow obtained a personal decree against her father-in-law for maintenance. Her late husband's five brothers were made parties to the suit, but no personal decree was made against them, nor did the widow ask that her maintenance be made a charge on the family property. On the death of her father-in-law, the family property devolved on his sons and grandsons, who sold certain of the property. There were arrears of maintenance due and the widow instituted the present suit, in which she asked for a decree establishing her right to receive maintenance for her life and for the arrears of maintenance on the responsibility of the property. Held, (i) that, the maintenance not having been declared a charge upon the portion of the property which had been alienated, this property was free from any charge for her maintenance; (ii) that the arrears of maintenance constituted a personal debt of the plaintiff's deceased father-in-law, and that his sons and grandson (the defendants) incurred his liability on his decease, and were bound to discharge the same out

7. ———— Previous demand—Right to arrears of maintenance. A Hindu widow brought a suit against her husband's brother to establish her right to maintenance, and to recover arrears for six years; she had made no demand before suit. Held, that she was not entitled to a decree for the arrears. SESHANNA v. SUBBARAYADU, I. L. R. 18 Mad. 403

8. ———— Discretion of Court in allowing arrears. Where a Hindu widow sues for maintenance from the family and estate of her deceased husband, with arrears of such maintenance, the allowance of arrears of maintenance is a question for the discretion of the Court, and the Court, if it allows arrears of maintenance at all, will not necessarily allow arrears at the same rate as it

1. ———— Death of person maintained where sum has been awarded for maintenance—Reversion to donor. There seems no authority for the proposition that, on the death of junior members of a family to whom certain properties were awarded for maintenance, not only the property so awarded, but the profits made upon it, by the donee, revert to the donor. *HUREHTRA PERSHAD DOSS PUNRAJ v. 19. ——— Charge on impartible zamindari. In a suit for maintenance brought by an illegitimate son of a Hindu zamindar, deceased: Held, that it was established that the plaintiff was the natural son of such zamindar and recognized by him as such, it not having been essential to the plaintiff's title to maintenance that he should be shown to have been born in the house of his father, or of a concubine possessing a peculiar status therein. Case remanded for the Courts in India to try whether such maintenance can be a charge upon an impartible zamindari, or, if not, out of what property or fund, if any, the son was entitled to be paid. *MUTUSWAMY JAGATPRA YETTAFFA NAIKEN v. release mortgage made by legitimate member—Right of redemption. An allowance for maintenance was received by the plaintiff's father, that father having been an illegitimate son born to a collateral relation of the head of a family. The ancestral property was in the possession of the latter, who was in a senior line of descent. The plaintiff, who was himself the legitimate son of his father, claimed to be entitled to redeem a mortgage of part of the ancestral estate, that mortgage having been effected by the above-mentioned head of the family. His ground of claim was that he had inherited the right to maintenance and had thus an interest of charge within the meaning of s. 91 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1884, to entitle him to redeem. Held, by the High Court, that the right of an illegitimate son in a Hindu family to receive maintenance from the family property is a purely personal right, and does not descend to his son. The legitimate son of an illegitimate member of a Hindu family who as such illegitimate son might have had a right to maintenance from the property of his father, had no such interest in the estate belonging to the

the dharma or religious rites applicable to the offspring are those prescribed for the mother's caste. Though an illegitimate child is entitled to claim maintenance from his father under s. 483 of the Criminal Procedure Code, such claim can only be enforced during the lifetime of the father and the right terminates with his death. Such a statutory right is cumulative and does not deprive persons otherwise entitled to maintenance, by the common

It is the duty of the father-in-law to maintain his widowed daughter-in-law. This obligation is legally enforceable where the father-in-law has by survivorship obtained property in which his son had a vested interest, as in a Mitalshara family. Where the father, on the death of his son, does not become entitled to any interest or property which the son had, the obligation to maintain the son's widow is only moral, and cannot be enforced in a Court of law. Khetramoni v. Kashinath, 2 B L R (A. C.) 15, followed. The moral obligation in the father to maintain his widowed daughter-in-law he maintained, where it exists, is not necessarily forfeited by a widow who resides away from her father-in-law's house, as long as she remains chaste. Raja Pirthee Sing v. Rani Raj Kauer, 20 W. house and went to live with her mother; and in 1880 she filed this suit against her father-in-law, the defendant, for maintenance. The defendant pleaded that the plaintiff was provided for by her husband's will, and further that the plaintiff had failed to obey her husband's direction to reside either in M's house or the defendant's house, and that therefore she was not entitled to a separate maintenance. Held, that the plaintiff was not bound to enforce her claim under her husband's will in lieu of claiming maintenance from her father-in-law. —Mitakshara law—Moveable ancestral property—Property liable for maintenance—Immoveable property purchased with profits. Under the Mitakshara law, moveable ancestral property which remains in the hands of a father, and has not been partitioned among his sons, is to be regarded as a fund chargeable with the maintenance of those members of the family who under Hindu law have claims for maintenance on the undivided estate of the family. All ancestral property is, while it remains undisposed of and unpartitioned, charged with the maintenance of all persons who are entitled to maintenance from the estate. Immoveable property purchased with the capital or profits of ancestral moveable property does not retain the character of ancestral moveable property, but those incidents attach to it which ordinarily attach to immoveable property acquired by and inherited from an ancestor. irrespective of notice of such lien. A Hindu widow, before she can enforce her charge for maintenance against property of her deceased husband in the hands of a purchaser from his heir, must show that there is no property of the deceased in the hands of the heir. In a suit for maintenance brought by a Hindu widow against her husband's brother who was the sole surviving member of that husband's family, and against bona fide purchasers for value from him (the defendant) of certain immoveable ancestral property of the family Held, that the mere circumstance that such purchasers had notice of her claim is not conclusive of the widow's rights against the property in their hands. If the property were sold in order to pay debts (not incurred for immoral purposes) of her husband, or his father, or grandfather, or for the benefit of the undivided family, or to satisfy a former decree obtained by the plaintiff herself against the same defendant for maintenance, such sale would be valid against her, whether or not the purchasers had notice of her claim. Per WEST, J.—According to the Mitakshara, sons must, from the moment of their father's death, be regarded as sole owners of the estate, yet with a liability to provide for the maintenance of the father and in the estate before its partition, but she has an equity to a provision which the Court will enforce to guard her against attempted fraud. 'The debts of the deceased owners take precedence of the maintenance of the widow. The estate is properly applied, in the first instance, by the sons as managers in payment of such debts. By a sale of the property the sons cannot evade a personal liability to provide for the widow. If a mother forgoing her claim to a separate provision out of the paternal property, resides with her sons or step-sons, and is maintained by them, she must submit to their dealing with the estate. liberal scale than it otherwise would. Per SANKARAN-NAIR, J.—The father-in-law is under a moral obligation to maintain his daughter-in-law, which ripens into legal obligations against the assets in the hands of his heirs Ranganmal v. Echammal, I. L. R. 22 Mad. 305, 307, referred to. The husband is under a moral obligation to support a wife, when she is living apart from no corrupt motive; and this moral obligation ripens into a legal obligation on the father-in-law when, on the death of the son, he takes ancestral property. The rights of a wife and widow respectively to maintenance, rest entirely on different grounds. The former is a personal obligation on the husband based on the identity arising from marriage relations and is not dependent on the possession of property. The right of a widowed daughter-in-law to claim maintenance from her father-in-law is based on the possession of ancestral property by the latter and cannot be defeated by any breach of duty on her part towards her husband, which might disentitle her to enforce a distinct claim in respect of a different relation and on account of considerations peculiar to that relation *SURAMPALLI BANGARANMA v. straining his wife from celebrating the marriage. The marriage nevertheless was solemnized with due ceremonies. The Court of first instance de-tion precedent to the validity of a marriage. The plaintiff, having been informed of his wife's intention to marry her daughter, made no bond fide attempt to marry her, and, after entirely foregoing his claim to all control over his daughter for many years, merely attempted to assert his right without any regard to her interests, and with the sole object of annoying the mother, from whom he

two years' imprisonment. At the end of his term of imprisonment he did not return to live with his father-in-law, but went to reside in his own father's house, where in 1884 he requested his wife R to join him with their daughter S. R refused, and she and S continued to live in the house of the first defendant, her father. The plaintiff then married a second wife. In November 1885, S having attained nine years of age—an age at which it is customary for Prabhoo to seek husbands for their daughters—demanded his daughter S from the defendants, who, however, refused to deliver the girl to the plaintiff. In May 1886, the plaintiff filed this suit against the defendants, complaining that they were about to have his daughter S married to her cousin without his (the plaintiff's) consent. He prayed that he might be declared entitled to the custody of his daughter and for an

The defendant pleaded, inter alia, that the betrothment had been repudiated, as the family to which the plaintiff belonged were guilty of female infanticide, and that it would be illegal, under the Hindu law, to enter into relationship with it. Held, that, as according to Hindu law a betrothment is effected by the bride and bridegroom walking seven steps hand in hand during a particular recital, and the contract is perfected upon their arriving at the seventh step, and may be enforced by the husband on completion of the time, and as the evidence adduced did not show, nor was it alleged or pre-her will. At the trial K stated that she was unwilling to be married for three or four years. The Court found that in the Kapole Bania caste, to which the parties belonged, marriages ordinarily took place when the bride was between twelve and fifteen years of age. K was born on the 2nd May 1881, so that she was nearly fifteen at the date of suit (16th January 1896). Before filing the suit, the plaintiff had called upon her and the defendant (her father) to fix a date for the marriage, but the defendant had declined to do so on the ground that his daughter did not wish to marry at that time, and that he would not force her to marry against her will. Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to the declaration prayed for. The marriage of Hindu children is a contract made by the parents, and the children themselves exercise no volition. This is equally true of betrothal, and there is no implied condition that fulfilment of the contract depends on the willingness of the girl at the time of marriage. It was contended that plaintiff could not obtain damages; that defendant had not broken the contract, the plaintiff assuming that the contract of betrothal was still in force, and the defendant having a locus penitentiae until Barakh 1952. Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to damages. There was practically a repudiation of the betrothal. The plaintiff's willingness to marry K at any time before the end of Barakh did not disentitle him to damages, seeing that K had declared her unwillingness to be married to plaintiff then, and the defendant had declared that he could not compel her to change her mind. PURSHOTAMDAS TRIVHAVANDAS v. The decision of this question, one way or the other, rested on considerations whether the substantial testimony of witnesses, who gave their testimony to the fact of the marriage in their presence, was, or was not, outweighed and negatived in judicial estimation by the antecedent and inherent improbability that such marriage, under the circumstances of the parties alleged to have entered into it, would have taken place. The oral evidence was, however, corroborated by inferences drawn from several facts well established. The present suit was defended by the successor in estate of the deceased, and it was common ground between this defendant and the plaintiff

That son and another assented to the sale. On its being contended that the sale was invalid in so far as the shares of the other two sons were concerned there being no family necessity, and there being no moral or religious obligation on a Hindu father to get his son married, so as to make the sale valid as against the other sons. Held, that there is no authority for the proposition that the omission to perform the ceremony of marriage in the case of a male Brahman entails a forfeiture of his caste or status, and in consequence there is no moral or religious obligation on a father to bring about the marriage of his son. The sale of land was therefore invalid in so far as the shares of the other brothers were concerned. GOVINDARAJULU NARASIMHAN v. DEVARASHOTLA VENKATANARASAYYA (1904) . I. L. R. 27 Mad. 206

HINDU LAW—MITAKSHARA.

1. Survivorship—Mitakshara family
—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1872), ss.
234, 244—Decree—Mortgage decree against father —Execution against representative—Right to raise question as to validity of decree—Immoral debt.
A mortgage decree made against a person governed by the Mitakshara law may after his death be executed against his son, who claimed the mortgaged properties by survivorship, although the latter was no party to the suit upon the mortgage. The son would be permitted to have the question tried under s. 244 of the Civil Procedure Code as to whether the debt had been contracted for immoral purposes. CHANDER PERSHAD & SHAM KOER (1905) I. L. R. 33 Cal. 678

2. Re-union—Mitakshara—Re-

The fact of living together and eating together on the same floor with food taken from the same cook-room or even the superintendence and control by the eldest and the most intelligent of the members cannot alone suffice to constitute either a joint or a reunited family as contemplated by Vijnaneswara and his followers, if there be satisfactory proof of previous ascertainment of the shares of individual members. The constitution of a joint Hindu family consisting of the father and his sons is such that the father represents the sons without express written authority and is considered to be the accredited agent of the joint family. He may sue and be sued and may bind the family by the result of the litigation. In a family arrangement settling disputed rights and liabilities his action as representative of the family is binding on the dependent members. *Stapilton v. 14. ———— Mortgage—Mitakshara—Joint Hindu Family—Mortgage of joint family property by father—Liability of sons in suit to enforce mortgage—Antecedent debt—Family necessity—Burden of proof. The father of a Joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara law cannot execute a mortgage of the joint family property which will be binding on his sons where the loan is not obtained for family necessity or to meet an antecedent debt. A debt is not "antecedent" if it is incurred at the time of the execution of a mortgage for the purpose of securing such debt. A creditor suing to enforce against the sons a mortgage executed by the father in a joint Hindu family over the joint family property is bound to prove that the loan secured by such mortgage was taken to satisfy an antecedent debt or was justified by some family necessity, or at least that he had before advancing the loan made inquiries which reasonably led to the belief by the father of a joint Hindu family who had sons living at the time. The mortgage was for valuable consideration but it was not shown that it was executed to meet any antecedent debt or for any family necessity, on the other hand it was not alleged that the debt secured by the mortgage was tainted with immorality. Held by STANLEY, C. J., and KNOX and ARKMAN, JJ., that the mortgage in question could not be enforced against the sons' interests in the joint family property. Per BANERJI, J. (RICHARDS, J., concurring):—As regards a Hindu son's liability to pay his father's debts not tainted with immorality there is no distinction in principle between a debt secured by a mortgage and an unsecured debt. Unless the debt is of such a nature that it is not the pious duty of the son to pay it, a mortgage of joint ancestral property made by the father is binding on and enforceable against the son and his interest in the property whether the loan secured by the mortgage was incurred at the time of the mortgage or had been taken at some date anterior to that of the mortgage. In a suit brought against the son to enforce the mortgage the onus is not on the plaintiff to prove that the debt was incurred for the benefit of the family, but it is for the son to prove that, having regard to the nature of the debt, it was not his pious duty to discharge it. 15. ——— Partition effected without taking into account a minor co-partner—Invalid partition. A partition effected without reserving any share for a minor member of the family and without the consent of some one authorized to act on his behalf is invalid as against the minor. Three brothers, S, L, and K, were members of a joint Hindu family. In 1862, S and L divided the whole of the family property between them without reserving any share for their brother K, who was then a minor. K lived with L as a member of his family. L died in 1867, leaving a childless widow, with whom K continued to live till his death in 1876. K left an infant son (the plaintiff) only a year old. Subsequently S died in 1887, leaving two widows without issue. In 1889 the plaintiff, being still a minor, sued by his next friend to recover either the whole or one-third of the family property in the possession of the widows of L and S. The principal defences to this suit were (i) that it was time-barred, and (ii) that the plaintiff was not entitled to claim more than one-third of the property in suit. Held, that the partition made by S and L in 1862 was invalid, as it was made without reserving any share for their minor brother K and without taking him into account. K's son was therefore entitled to recover the whole of the ancestral property as the sole surviving male member of the family. KRISHNARAI v. KHANDOOODA

28. Intention as to joint or several ownership. No right vests in any member of a joint Hindu family to a specific share in the family property until some act has been done which has the effect of turning the joint ownership into a several ownership. This may be done by signification of intention. It is by such signification of intention taking place, having the effect of making the share of each member both several and defined, that a member of a joint Hindu family is enabled to dispose of his own share by sale whilst the family remains joint. *RAJIBRANUND DOSS v. the different members of it in distinct and defined shares, that the family was not a joint and undivided Hindu family. ADI DEO NANAI SINGH v. DUKHARAN SINGH I. L. R. 5 AIL 533

30. — Intention—Suit for separate share of joint estate. Although a suit by a member of a joint Hindu family against his co-sharers for a separate share of the joint estate be not in terms a suit for partition, yet, if it appear that the intention of the plaintiff was to obtain the share which he would be entitled to on a separation, and the decree passed in the suit assigns him that share, such decree does in fact effect a partition, at all events, of rights, which, under the doctrine laid down in the case of Appovier v. Ramana Subba Aiyar, 11 Moo. I. L. J. 15, is effectual to destroy the joint estate. JOY NARAIN GHRI v. GHOSH CHUNDER MITT

31. — Specification and registration of shares under the Land Registration Act (Eng. Act VII of 1876). B, a Hindu governed by the Mitakshara law, died, leaving two minor sons, J and K, and also a widow, L, and two minor sons by her, the mother of J and K having predeceased him. On J's attaining majority, the Court of Wards, which had taken possession of all the property, withdrew from the management, and L then applied under Act XL of 1858 and obtained a certificate with respect to the shares of K and her two minor sons, and the names of the four brothers were recorded under the Land Registration Act with the specification of the shares of each. Held, that neither the granting of the certificate to L, nor the registration of the specific shares of each of the co-owners under the provisions of the Land Registration Act amounted to a partition such as to justify the Court in granting the certificate asked for. *HOOLASH KOER v. 33. — Decree effecting partition—Separate estate. In a suit brought by the younger of two Hindu brothers against his elder brother for the partition of lands belonging to an ancestral joint estate and against other defendants, cept in as far as such interests might be valid as against the plaintiff under the Hindu law, the Court passed an order to the effect that the property claimed was partible, and that the plaintiff was entitled to a moiety, but directed that, with a view to ascertain how far the money awarded to the plaintiff was affected by the acts of the plaintiff's father and elder brother, a commissioner should be appointed to investigate accounts and report thereon to the Court. Before the enquiry thus directed to be made was completed, and before a final decree was passed for the division of the property, the plaintiff died. Held, that the order passed by the Court was tantamount to a declaratory decree determining that there was to be a partition of the estate into moieties, and making the brothers separate in estate from its date, if they had not previously become so, and consequently that the plaintiff's interest in the property in suit would not pass to the defendant, his elder brother, as joint estate by survivorship, but to his own representatives as separate estate. *Appovier v. The minor died, and entitled to execute, inasmuch as the decree had not effected a partition, and that the property at his death still remained joint family property which passed to the male survivors of the family, and that she was only entitled to maintenance. Held, that the effect of the decree was to make the applicant's husband a divided member of his family. It awarded him a one-sixth share of the family estate, and assigned to him a separate allowance. The mere fact that it postponed the actual possession of the share until he had attained the age of twenty-partition suit, it being found that the several branches of a Hindu family had lived separately for forty or fifty years, had enjoyed during that period separate and distinct portions of the family property or portions of the property in regular rotation, and had dealt with the separate portions in every respect as their own property, and that in the survey records the lands were entered in the names of the several branches in respect of their separate shares:—Held, that the evidence as to the mode of enjoyment by the several branches of a family during so long a period ought to be taken as establishing a tacit agreement of enjoyment according to their shares. There being no evidence on the record to show when and by what member of the family certain property in the possession of a particular branch of the family was acquired, and the entry in the survey records with respect to it being different from that of the ancestral fields, that is, the entry being in the name of the representative of that particular branch with no sub-division of shares, and the party seeking partition of such property having failed to give evidence to rebut the presumption arising from the sole enjoyment of the particular branch and the entry in the survey records. Held, that such property was the separate acquisition of that particular branch. Moro v. They might elect either to have a partition of their shares by metes and bounds or to continue to live together and enjoy their property in common as before. Assuming a co-sharer's right in the family estate not to have been lost, a deed of gift of a portion thereof to another co-sharer is a violation of his right not justified by the circumstance that the first co-sharer had wrongfully appropriated some of the joint property in which the others might have recovered their rights by an action at law. A co-sharer's hereditary right does not, however, entitle him to claim a partition of a portion only of the ancestral property. KALKA PERSHAD v. BODREE SAR 3 N. W. 267

In a suit to obtain by partition half of an ancestral dwelling house, in which defendant was living, the latter averred that the house in which plaintiff was living was likewise ancestral, and that in a partition between them the houses which they respectively occupied had fallen to their respective shares. Plaintiff had replied that his house was not ancestral, but had been purchased out of his own funds. Held, that it was necessary to enquire into plaintiff's title under the whole circumstances of the case, and when it appeared that he was in separate occupation of a portion of the ancestral dwelling-house whether he had a right to the partition of the one without bringing the other into hotchpot. *RANI LOCHUN PATTEK v. 15. — Property left undivided at the time of partition—Suit to recover share of the produce—Amendment of plaint—Variance between pleading and proof. The circumstance that there has been a partition between the members of a joint Hindu family does not, in the absence of any special agreement between them, alter their rights as to the property still undivided. As to this, they continue to stand to one another in the relation of members of an undivided Hindu family. A claim to a share of the produce of the property left undivided at a partition does not lie, because such a claim is based on the right to a particular share in the property itself which has no existence in the case of an undivided family. A suit for a share of the produce of the property left undivided at a partition cannot be amended by making it a suit for partition without entirely changing its character. *GATRISHANKAR PARABHURAN v. ## 4. RIGHT TO PARTITION.

(a) GENERALLY.

1. ——— Right of member of joint family to separate share. Members of a joint family residing in joint premises are entitled, on the occurrence of a dispute between them and their co-sharers, to come into Court and ask to have their proper share assigned. The fact of their not having been in possession of a particular portion of the premises is no bar to a claim for such portion. BIMOLA v. DANGOO KANSAREE. 10 W. R. 180

2. ——— Member of family more than four degrees removed from acquirer—Remote relative. Partition can effectually be demanded by a Hindu more than four degrees removed from the acquirer or original owner of the property sought to be divided, provided he is not more than four degrees removed from the last owner, however remote he may be from the original owner thereof. Deralla's Text Anubhava Vibhaktinam, discussed. MORO VISHWANATH v. GANESH VITHAL. 10 Bom. 441

4. ——— Inheritance of talukhdari estates in Oude—Sanad recognizing primogeniture, effect of, as to existing rights of inheritance—Shares held by members of family—Mesne profits on specific and definite shares. The ordinary rule is that, if persons are entitled beneficially to shares in an estate, they may have partition. Although in a suit for the partition of joint family estate, where the head of the joint family does not account for the profits under the ordinary Hindu law, mesne profits are not recoverable, it is not so where the family has been living under a clear agreement that the members are entitled not as an ordinary Hindu family, but in specific and definite shares. If the enjoyment of those shares is in any way disturbed the right to sue for profits will arise, as well as the right to partition. A talukhdan estate which, before and after annexation, was subject to the common Hindu law of Oude, viz. the Mitakshara, was restored after the general confiscation of 1858 to the family, which received a sanad recognizing the shares of its members. At the same time, a grant was made to the head of the family as talukhdar of two other villages, and to him afterwards in 1861 was issued a primogeniture sanad of the above talukhdari estate. This sanad could not prevail over the family's rights of inheritance and effect same on the same talukhdari estate. MATHURA NAIKIN v. ESU NAIKIN. I. L. R. 4 Bom. 545

When an adult co-parcener has taken up a hostile position to the interests of minor co-parceners and denied their rights, or sets up his own independent title, or where the minors live separately and the adult co-parcener does not support them, in all these cases it is in the interest of the minors that their share shall be partitioned and set apart. The plaintiffs, who were minors, sued by their next friend for a partition of their ancestral property in the possession of their step-brother, the defendant. It appeared that soon after their father's death disputes and differences arose between plaintiffs' mother and their step-brother, which led to their separation in food and residence. The defendant managed the family property, but did not support the minors out of the rents and profits thereof. Hence the suit.

extent of the consideration paid—Transaction in effect a gift as to part and a sale as to remainder. In 1899 R and his brother filed a suit against their father and their two younger brothers for partition. On 18th December 1898, before the decree was passed, R conveyed a house to the present first defendant. The decree was then passed, and by it the house in question was allotted to R's share. In 1900 a suit was instituted on behalf of R's minor sons against R praying for partition of the properties, which had been allotted to R by the decree in the suit of 1898. On October 8th, 1900 R consented to be and was declared sent suit against the present first defendant in order to determine the validity of the conveyance. Though the conveyance had been executed prior to the decree, by which the house was actually allotted to R, it was not clear whether the house had not become the separate property of R under an agreement prior to the institution of the suit of 1898. Held, that, in any event, every member of an undivided family has a vested interest in joint family property, which interest will be affected by transactions entered into by him in favour of purchasers for value; Ayyagiri Venkata Ramayya v.

Ayyagiri Ramayya, I. L. R. 25 Mad. 690. The conveyance, therefore, could not be held to be inoperative and void by reason that the property conveyed was not vested in the vendor at the date of the conveyance. The validity and operation of the conveyance must be decided on the footing that it was a conveyance of ancestral property made by a Hindu father, the managing member of a joint Hindu family consisting of himself and his minor sons. Held, also, that, inasmuch

Rs. 1,000 the conveyance was, in effect, one for value to the extent of Rs. 1,000, and a conveyance by way of gift to the extent of Rs. 10,000. In these circumstances, if the property conveyed had been the sole and separate property of R, the conveyance would have been valid and operative in its entirety. But as the property conveyed was the joint property of R and his sons, effect could not be given to the conveyance, as if R had been the sole owner of the whole property, or even of a third part thereof. It is not competent to an individual member of a Hindu family to alienate by way of gift his undivided share or any portion thereof; and such an alienation, if made, is void in toto. This principle cannot be evaded by the undivided member professing to make an alienation for value when such value is manifestly inadequate and inequitable value received, and remote that, in the conveyance, he in respect of a reasonable portion of the joint family property, for the discharge of an antecedent debt (not incurred for an illegal or immoral purpose), the conveyance, as such, will bind the sons also. Under the circumstances of the present case: Held, that first defendant was not entitled to

Rs. 1,000, and that was an antecedent debt of R, binding also on his minor sons, first defendant was entitled to an equitable charge on the whole of the property to the extent of that Rs. 1,000 with interest thereon from the date of the conveyance, and was liable for rent. *ROTTALA RUDRANATHAN CHETTI v. ## 8 AGREEMENTS NOT TO PARTITION AND RESTRAINT ON PARTITION.

1. ——— Condition against partition — Effect of prohibition Where a neempuro, executed by the father of a joint Hindu family many years before his death, declared that his four sons were not to divide the property; but that any single member of the family, desiring to make any particular arrangement, would be bound by the wishes of the others, and it happened eventually that one of the sons predeceased his father without issue, and another leaving two sons, who were not bound by the prohibition:—Held, that, as these grandsons were parties having interest in the property, conditions which do not and cannot affect them ought not to be held to restrain the other co-shares.

By his will he charged his executors not to fail to carry out the agreement. The ceremonies continued to be performed as directed in the deed by the plaintiff and the defendants M D, N G, C G, and S G. By deed dated 14th July 1863, N D, C G, and S G, mortgaged for valuable consideration, to the defendant A B M certain property, including an undivided share of the said dwelling-house. A B M afterwards instituted a suit on the mortgage against N D, C G, and S G, and by the decree in that suit it was, on 14th April 1870, ordered that the defendants should be absolutely foreclosed of all equity of redemption in the said family dwelling-house and other premises comprised in the mortgage. Subsequent proceedings, taken by A B M against the defendants N D, C G, and S G, resulted in A B M obtaining a writ of possession against them, which he endeavoured, but unsuccessfully, to have executed.

By an agreement entered into between five brothers, who formed a joint Hindu family, it was provided that none of the parties, "nor their representatives, nor any person, should be able to divide the real and personal property belonging to the family into shares; that while the male descendants of any of the brothers lived, the sons of the daughter of the deceased persons should not

I. L. R. 1 All 53

7. ——— Inheritance—Missing person—Claim after seven years—Co-owners—Absent co-owner—Claim to his share of property a question of evidence, not of succession. D, G, and B were co-owners of certain khoti villages. B disappeared and was unheard of for more than seven years. In his absence, D received his (B's) share of the rents and profits. G claimed to be entitled to a moiety of B's share thereon, and brought this suit against D. Held, that G was entitled to such moiety. B, having been absent and unheard of for more than seven years, might be presumed to be dead under s. 108 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872); and G, as one of his two survivors, was entitled to a moiety of his property. Where the right of a party claiming to succeed to the property of another is based on the allegation that the latter has not been heard of for more than seven years, the question to be decided is one of evidence and not a part of the substantive law of inheritance. 8. ——— Presumption of date of death—Evidence Act, ss. 107, 108. Upon the death of a sonless Hindu, his separate estate devolved upon his two widows, the first of whom had a daughter, who had two sons, G and S O, having a son D. After the death of the first widow, the second came into sole possession of the property and so continued till her death in 1892. At that time S was still living, but G had not been heard of by any of his relatives or friends since 1869 or 1870. In 1881, a purchaser from S claimed possession of the whole estate, and was resisted by D on the ground that the estate had, on the death of the second widow, devolved on his father and S jointly, and S was not competent to alienate it. Held, that the question whether the defendant's father was living at the time of the second widow's death in 1882 was a question of evidence governed by ss. 107 and 108 of the Evidence Act, that under the circumstances the defendant's father must be held to have died prior to the time referred to; that consequently, according to the Hindu law, the right of succession to his grandfather's estate did not rest in him jointly with the plaintiff's vendor, so as to enable the defendant to claim through him; that the plaintiff's vendor was therefore competent to alienate the entire estate, and the claim must be allowed. Motbar Ali v. Budh Singh, I. L. R. 7 All, 297; Jannajay Marumdar v. Keshab Lal Ghose, 2 B L. R. A. C. 134; Gura Dass Nag v. Malial Nag, 6 B L. R. Ap. 16; and Parmesha R. v. Bishesha Singh, I. L. 9. ——— Validity of adoption depending on whether natural son alive or dead—Onus of proof—Deed or will conferring estate on a person described as adopted son—Person not heard of for seven years. Death is to be presumed after a certain interval (seven years); but there is no presumption as to the time of death. If, therefore, any one has to establish the precise period during these seven years at which a person died, he must do so by evidence, and can neither rely, on the one hand, upon the presumption of death, nor, on the other, upon the continuance of life. There is no presumption of law that because a person was alive in 1877, therefore he was alive in 1878. One S died in September 1878, leaving a widow, B. The year before his death his only son (Bala), a child of eight years old, had left his home and was never heard of again. A few days before his death, S adopted the plaintiff (his nephew) and executed a deed of adoption, which stated that he had no hope that his son Bala was alive, and that he had therefore adopted the plaintiff. Tho as S's adopted son, brought this suit to recover some of S's property, which was in the hands of the defendants, who claimed it as S's heirs. They (inter alia) impeached the plaintiff's adoption. Held, that, in order to recover the property as the adopted son of S, it lay on the plaintiff to prove a valid adoption. It was a condition precedent to prove that at the death of the adoption S was without a son. It was therefore for the plaintiff to prove that Bala was then dead. There was at that time no presumption that Bala was dead, and, there being no evidence on the point, it was impossible to say when he died, or consequently that the adoption was valid. Held, however, that plaintiff was entitled to succeed as donee under the deed of adoption. It was clearly S's intention to give the estate to the plaintiff as being his adopted son. But if the adoption was invalid, the gift had no effect. The onus here was on the defendants. It was for them to show that Bala was at that date alive and the adoption therefore invalid. That burden they had not discharged, and the plaintiff therefore was entitled to a decree. RANGO BALAJI v. MUDIYERPA

Suit for restitution of conjugal rights—Plaintiff's suit not barred by his being out of caste. Held, that to bar a suit brought by a Hindu for restitution of conjugal rights, the defendant must set up some offence of a matrimonial nature such as would support a decree for judicial separation. It is not a defence that the plaintiff is out of caste, nor ought a decree to be made conditional on the plaintiff being restored to caste. PANJI v. SHEO NARAIN, I. L. R. 8 All. 74, and *BINDA v. The Judicial Committee, without deciding that, as an adopted son, this minor had the same rights as a naturally-born son, and without deciding that he would have been entitled, in default of nearer relations, to succeed to the estate of inheritance, after the death of the widow, pointed out that he could only have succeeded as a distant bandhu, and that he had not a vested, but at most a contingent interest. And held, that, there being in fact heirs nearer in the line of succession than this minor, the grounds of his competence to sue in respect of his interest, assuming that interest to exist, should have been made out in the manner above indicated. ANUND KUNWAR v. husband, for possession of such estate, on the ground that her mother had, without reason, alienated the whole estate, with a few slight exceptions, absolutely to certain persons, who had again re-sold portions thereof. The defendants pleaded that the suit would not lie in the lifetime of the plaintiff's mother. It was found that the alienations were not fraudulent. Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to have possession of the property delivered to her, inasmuch as the alienation did not amount to a total destruction of the benefit derivable from the right of succession, and could not therefore be called waste, but that she was entitled only to a declaration that the alienation made by the widow and the subsequent alienations by her alienees should not affect or prejudice the plaintiff or reversioner's interests beyond the lifetime of the widow. Mondry Mondry Shaha v. Anundmoyi, 8 C. L. R. 49

4. ———— Alienation by widow—Fraud, proof of. A Hindu widow being in possession of certain lakhs lands in which she had a life-interest, the zamindar brought a suit against a minor reversioner and others to resume the land, obtained an ex parte decree, and, whether under colour thereof or not, afterwards obtained possession. The widow, who was then dispossessed, brought a separate suit to recover the property, in which the reversioner, who had meantime come of age, was joined as a co-plaintiff. Owing to a petition presented by the widow, this suit was treated as having come to an end. Held, that, in the circumstances, and the consequent jeopardy to the title of the reversioners, the reversioner above referred to was competent, without showing fraud on the part of the widow, to bring a suit to have the land reduced to his possession, and to prevent the zamindar from acquiring title by adverse possession. *Chundar Koomar Gandooly v. 5. ———— Collusion of widow with parties in adverse possession. Suit by a Hindu daughter, for herself and as guardian of her minor son, to recover possession of her deceased father's separate estate. The legal representatives of the estate were, first the deceased's widow, and after her, the plaintiff and her son. The widow not only failed to occupy and manage the estate, but, in collusion with the other defendants claiming under a hostile title, abandoned her rights, alleging that her husband was not separate, but a member of a joint family, and left the separate estate from becoming extinguished by the operation of the law of limitation, it was necessary to remove the adverse occupants and to place the estate in the possession of some person to be appointed to represent it; and as the widow (the legal representative) never was in possession and did not ask for it, but repudiated all claim to it, it was held that no one had a better right to the

7. ———— Agreement to divide reversion—Agreement to divide reversion when it should fall in, creates no vested right, but only right to claim specific performance. Three brothers, S, R and K and their father made an arrangement which amounted to a division of the family properties. The father and R and K continued, however, to live together. The father died first and then R, leaving him surviving A, his widow, and B, his daughter. A and B did not claim R's share, but were content with maintenance. There was, however, no surrender by A of her rights. S and K entered into an agreement between themselves to the effect that K should enjoy R's share and maintain A and B, S being given a small piece of land at once, and that after A's death S was to take half of R's share. B died unmarried in A's lifetime and S predeceased A who died in 1891. In a suit brought in 1901 by the son of S to recover one-half share of R's property: Held (WALLIS, J., dissenting), that K and S were expectant reversionary heirs and the agreement between them was in effect to divide the reversion when it should fall in. The right of K as such presumptive reversionary heir was incapable of transfer on the principle embodied in s. 6 of the Transfer of Property Act, and the agreement did not operate to vest any property in S as from the date of agreement and the suit was not therefore maintainable. Per BODDAM, J.—The agreement gave only a right to claim specific performance thereof when the reversion should fall in, which right became barred as it was not enforced within the statutory period after the death of the widow. Per WALLIS, J. The widow not having claimed her husband's share and having contented herself with maintenance, S and K were not in the position of expectant heirs, although the widow by asserting her right might have reduced them to that position. Under the circumstances, the agreement was something more than a mere contract on the part of K to convey to S a half share on the widow's death. The effect of the agreement was to give S a vested interest in a half share in the lands to take effect in possession.

4. RELINQUISHMENT BY WIDOW TO REVERSIONERS.

1. ———— Effect of relinquishment by female—Title of reversioner on relinquishment. The succession of females according to Hindu law is not regular succession and is not based upon the ordinary theory of spiritual benefit. Therefore, if they relinquish their rights in favour of the reversioner, the case is again brought back to the normal state of succession, the effect being to vest in him a complete title. *GRAND PERSHAD KUR v. The other widow, S, came to an arrangement with R under which, on 9th December 1889, two deeds were executed, by the first of which S relinquished to R her life-interest in the properties she inherited as widow of M, and by the other R conveyed to S an absolute right in half the properties so relinquished, retaining the other half himself. R died on 27th November 1890, and his widow P came into possession of the half share of the properties belonging to him. In a suit by the plaintiff, as the next reversionary heir of M for a declaration that the deeds were invalid, and did not affect his reversionary right:—Held, that the suit was maintainable in the lifetime of the widow. *Iri Dui Koer v. 1. DESCRIPTION AND DEVOLUTION OF STRIDHAN.

1. ——— Definition of "stridhan"—Different classes of stridhan—Woman married in Asura form. The etymological import of the word "stridhan," and the different views with which it is regarded in the Eastern and Western schools of Hindu law, pointed out. The Mitakshara recognizes only one class of stridhan, and includes in that class all property acquired by a woman by inheritance. According to the last-mentioned authority, a woman's stridhan, if she has been married by the Asura form, upon her death childless, goes to her mother, her father, and their kindred,—i.e., to the sapindas of her father in the first instance,—and, failing them, to her mother's next of kin; but if a woman has been married according to one of the approved forms, her stridhan descends, upon her death childless, to her husband and his sapindas. Over stridhan acquired by inheritance (so far as it consists of immoveable property) a woman's power of alienation is limited. The Vyavahara Mayukha also considers property acquired by a woman by inheritance to be stridhan, but classes stridhan under two heads—stridhan in a narrower sense, embracing particular species, for which a peculiar mode of devolution is prescribed, and stridhan generally (including stridhan acquired by inheritance), which descends in the same line as if the woman had been a male,—i.e., to her sons and the rest,—and this notwithstanding her having left daughters. 15. ———— Immoveable property inherited by a married woman from her father. According to the Hindu law of inheritance, as received in the Bombay Presidency, immoveable property inherited by a married woman from her father, whether or not it be strictly entitled to the name of stridhan, descends on her death to her own heirs, and not to her father's ascendants according to what is called the "melancholy succession." An inheritance descending on a married woman from her father must be classed as stridhan and descends accordingly. NAVALRAM ATMARAM v. NANNKISHOR SHIV NARAYAN. 1 Bom. 209

16. ———— Gifts by husband to wife from motives of affection—Ornaments for ordinary wear. Gifts of affection given by a husband to his wife after marriage are stridhan, and it is not necessary to the preservation of their character as stridhan that they should be constantly worn. If given unreservedly, they become the wife's stridhan. If ornaments appear to be ornaments which a wife would ordinarily wear in her station of life, and not those which would be purchased for use only on extraordinary occasions, such as marriages and the like, the presumption is that they are for the ordinary use of the wife and given to her without reservation. They would therefore be regarded as gifts of affection and would constitute stridhan, and would not be liable to attachment and sale for the satisfaction of the husband's debts. *RADHA v. and died in 1862. Under the terms of the deed, the property then went to the survivor of the two grandsons, who in 1864 sold his rights and interests in the property. In 1865 the purchaser brought a suit and recovered possession from the defendants. His representatives now sued for mesne profits of the property from 1860 to 1865. Held, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to mesne profits which had accrued due, but were uncollected, in the lifetime of the daughter; that such mesne profits would go to her heirs, who would alone be entitled to them. *GURU PRASAD ROY v. sense, the "sons and the rest" take precedence over the "daughter and the rest." Failing both sons and daughters, the heirs to "stridhan proper" and "stridhan improper" are identical, save that as between male and female offspring the latter have a preferential right as regards "stridhan proper," while the former have a similar right as to "stridhan improper." The author of the Mayukha, like the author of the Mitakshara, does not regard the enumeration of specific kinds of stridhan in the old Smriti texts as exhaustive. He includes under the name all that by law becomes the property of the woman, only (unlike the author of the Mitakshara) he distinguishes the specific kinds enumerated in the texts from those which are not so enumerated for purposes of inheritance. In doing this it seems quite reasonable to lay down that, as regards that class of property which is emphatically sold the property to plaintiffs, who brought this suit for a declaration that they were entitled to certain shares in the property and for delivery of the same. For the defence it was contended that the property in question was not the stridhanam of K, that K had taken only a limited and qualified interest therein, and that on K's death it devolved on her husband's lineal male descendants, and that, in consequence, the sale to plaintiffs conferred on them no title to the property: Held, that the property was K's stridhanam, and, consequently, M was, on her death, heir to it. There is no necessary connection between the limited nature of the estate which a widow takes in her husband's property and the interest accruing to her in the income derived by her as such limited owner. That which becomes vested in her in her own right and which she can dispose of at pleasure is her own property, not limited but absolute, exclusive and separate, in every sense of the term, and devolves as such. As, in the present state of the law, the income is completely dissociated from the corpus, there is no presumption that savings or purchases with savings effected by a widow are incrementa to the corpus of the husband's estate and pass together with it. *Alkana v. Questions of the Hindu law of inheritance to property in the Island of Bombay are to be determined in accordance with the Mitakshara, subject to the doctrine to be found in the Mayukha where the latter differs from it. But as a general principle, the Mitakshara and the Mayukha should be so construed as to harmonize with one another wherever and so far as that is reasonably possible. *Gajabai v. The Mitakshara is the paramount authority in this Presidency and in the absence of a consensus of opinion among the commentators, and where there is no evidence of usage to the contrary, the general doctrine of Mitakshara Law must prevail over the Smriti Chandrika. 1. — Lunacy—Succession—Joint Hindu family.—A member of a joint Hindu family, who has acquired by his birth an interest in the joint family property, is not divested of that interest by subsequently becoming insane. Deo Kishen v. Budh Prakash, I. L. R. 5 All. 509, followed. TIBBETI SAHAI v. MUHAMMAD UMAR (1905) I. L. R. 28 All. 247

2. — Murder—Unchastity—Mother, partly to murder of her son cannot succeed as heir to such son—Unchastity of mother no bar to her succeeding as heir to her son—Degradation does not involve loss of proprietary rights. A mother, who has been a party to the murder of her son, cannot succeed by inheritance to the property of such son. Under the Mitakshara law, female heirs other than the widow are not precluded from inheriting by reason of unchastity Kopyodu v. Lakshmi, I. L. R. 5 Mad. 149, followed. Degradation, without exclusion from caste, does not involve loss of proprietary rights; neither has aggravated unchastity that effect. Per WALLIS, J.—The unchastity of the widow is expressly laid down as a ground of exclusion in numerous texts, but there is no such authority in favour of excluding other females. Degradation does not affect proprietary rights of the degraded person since the passing of Act XXI of 1850 Per SANKARAN-NAIR, J.—The mother's claim to succession rests on consanguinity and not on religious merit, and incapacity to inherit due to inability to perform sacrifices cannot therefore be presumed. the parents, that in the absence of these ceremonies the marriage was not in the Brahma, but the Asura form and that the parents and not the husband were entitled to succeed to the property. The evidence also showed in that community it was not customary to perform these ceremonies. It was also proved that the jewels given to the bride were given as presents to her and not as bride-price and that the father when giving his daughter decked with jewels, pronounced the sloka, appropriate to the Brahma and Daiva forms of marriage: Held, that according to Hindu Law, it must be presumed in the absence of evidence to the contrary that a marriage was in the Brahma form. Such a presumption cannot be made when it is shown that a certain community have till recently been following the Asura form of marriage. Though in this case the Court will not presume that the marriage was in the Asura form. The Asura form of marriage is not approved even for the Sudra classes. The distinctive mark of the Asura form is the payment of money for the bride, as the absence of such payment is of the approved forms. The offerings and ceremonies necessary to constitute

In a suit brought by a mortgagee against his mortgagor (both parties being Hindus) the decree ordered the defendant to pay interest from the date of suit to decree upon the total found due after applying the rule of damdupat at the date of suit. It was objected that this order of further interest violated the rule of damdupat. Held, that the discretionary power as to awarding interest conferred on the Courts by s. 209 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) may be exercised without reference to the law of damdupat. DHONDOSHET v. 32. Rule of damdupat—Mortgage—Original mortgagor a Hindu—Assignment of mortgage to Mahomedan purchaser—Sue by Mahomedan purchaser for redemption—Rule of damdupat how far applicable. A Hindu mortgaged his property in 1843 to a Mahomedan for R150, with interest at 12 per cent per annum. On the 5th April 1880, the Hindu mortgagor's interest was sold to the plaintiff, who was a Mahomedan. In March 1893, the plaintiff sued for redemption, both parties to the suit being Mahomedan. Held, that as long as the mortgagor was a Hindu (i.e., until 1880) the rule of damdupat applied, and that as soon as the interest doubled the principal, further interest stopped. The sum of R300 was therefore the full amount of debt for which the land could be charged and hable in the hands of a Hindu debtor. But on the 5th April 1880 the plaintiff (a Mahomedan) became the debtor. The rule of damdupat terest at R12 per annum from the date of his purchase (5th April 1880) until payment. ALI SAHEB v. SHARJI

I. L. R. 26 Mad. 662

34. Interest—Damdupat—Interest accrued due not affected by the rule of damdupat. Plaintiff advanced R714 to the defendant. The whole of this sum was repaid by the defendant. The plaintiff then sued to recover R33-9-2, being the amount of interest over the amount from the date of the loan to the date of its repayment. The defendant raised the plea of damdupat, alleging that no sum was due as principal at the date of suit, so none could be recovered by way of interest. Held, that the claim should be allowed; since the rule of damdupat had no application to a right that has already accrued. The rule of damdupat does not divest rights that

Possession of the estate left by their deceased husband was taken by two widows of a deceased Hindu, who, being childless, had before his death adopted a son, to whom also, by will, he bequeathed his estate. The adopted son died soon after the testator. Held, that the widows had a possessory title or interest in the estate, notwithstanding that a preferable title might exist in others through the deceased legatee; also that the estate, being jointly held by them, was partible, and either widow might maintain a suit for partition. A widow, who succeeds to the estate of her husband in default of male issue, whether she takes by inheritance or by survivorship, does not take a mere life-estate. The whole estate is for the time vested in her, though in some respects for only a qualified interest. She holds an estate of inheritance to herself and the heirs of her husband; and upon the termination of that estate, the property descends to

There is no presumption of law arising where the late husband possessed considerable property, that property found to be in the possession of the widow after his death must have been included in that which belonged to him unless she shows that she obtained the property from another source. *RAN BIJAI BAHADUR SINGH v. HINDU LAW—WIDOW—contd.1. INTEREST IN ESTATE OF HUSBAND—contd.(a) BY INHERITANCE—contd.

—Liability of heir to pay widow's debts—Power to borrow money on security of estate. The property acquired by a Hindu widow by purchase, with moneys borrowed on her own credit, is liable to be sold in satisfaction of her debts. Where a Hindu widow has acquired property purchased by moneys borrowed on the credit of her husband's estate, it is equitable that the heir of the husband, who takes in succession to her, should not be permitted to take such acquired property freed from the liability of satisfying a debt contracted by the widow to enable her to make the acquisition, and if the heir claims to take the acquisition, he is bound to satisfy the debt. A Hindu widow may encumber her husband's estate for her own maintenance; consequently, it seems that, if she can derive no income from the estate sufficient for her maintenance, there being no funds for cultivation, she would be at liberty to borrow money, on the security of the estate, for the purposes of cultivation and provision for herself. OODEY SINGH v PHOOL CHUND 5 N. 11. ———— Alienations by a widow of her husband's estate in order to pay his time-barred debts—Widow's status as distinguished from that of a manager—Liability of alienation—Rights of reversioners. According to the Hindu law, a widow is competent to alienate her husband's estate for the purpose of paying his debts, even though they may be barred by the law of limitation. Her alienations for such a purpose are legal and binding on the reversionary heirs. A widow stands in a different position from that of a manager of a joint family. The latter can act only with the consent, express or implied, of the body of co-parceners. In the widow's case, the co-parceners are reduced to herself, and the estate centres in her. She can therefore do what the body of co-parceners can do subject always to the condition that she act fairly to the expectant heirs. The rights of these heirs impose, on persons dealing with a widow, the obligation of special circumspection, failing which they may find their securities against the estate to be of no avail after the widow's death. *CHIMNAJI GOVIND GODSOLE v. B having during his lifetime mortgaged certain property, the income of which was sufficient only to pay interest on a portion of the mortgage-debt, his widow, after his death, sold it before the mortgage-debt fell due. The reversioners sued to set aside the sale. Held, that, although there might have been no absolute necessity for the widow to sell the property to provide herself with maintenance, still, as there was no other family property, the property in question must necessarily have been sold at the expiration of the time fixed by the mortgage, and the sale by the widow ought to be supported. were made without any legal necessity. The defendant also purchased B's share in the thikans in dispute. The plaintiff purchased C's rights, and on the widow's death, sued to set aside her alienations and to obtain joint possession with the defendant of all the thikans. The defendant pleaded (inter alia) that the widow's alienations were valid and binding on the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff's remedy was a partition suit. Held, that A's widow, not having higher powers than those of an ordinary Hindu widow who succeeds as heir to her sonless husband, could only make valid alienations for purposes warranted by the law. As no legal necessity was shown in respect of the alienations in question, which were made long after disputes had commenced between her and her adopted son, they were not binding on him or on his abnee, the plaintiff. *AKTALI v. She subsequently paid off T's debt, amounting to Rs. 629, and in 1876 she mortgaged the property for Rs. 999 to B, who was put into possession. In 1881 she adopted the plaintiff, and in 1882 the plaintiff brought this suit to recover the property. He contended that B had no power to alienate or mortgage the ancestral immovable property of her deceased husband, and

alid) that the plaintiff could not impeach transactions effected by his adoptive mother prior to his adoption. Held, that the plaintiff, as the adoptive son of A, had a right to impeach the unauthorized transactions of his adoptive mother B, who possessed only a widow's restricted power of alienation. The plaintiff was adopted by B to her husband, who was the last owner of the ancestral property. The plaintiff at once succeeded to that property upon his adoption, and as heir of his adoptive father was entitled to object to any alienation made by B on the principle that the restrictions upon a Hindu widow's power of alienation are inseparable from her estate, and their existence does not depend on that of heirs capable of taking on her death. Held, also, that the plaintiff was entitled to redeem the property on payment of such amount only as was raised by B for the purpose of meeting expenses necessarily incurred by her. Held, further, that the onus of proving the necessity for alienation lay upon B. The Court found that there was no evidence that any sum beyond Rs. 629, the amount of T's mortgage, was really required by B, and accordingly directed that the mortgage account should be taken between the plaintiff and B on the footing that the principal of the mortgage debt was Rs. 629 only, instead of Rs. 999. LAKSHMAN BHAS KHOORKE v. 52. Leave granted by Hindu widow while in possession of widow's estate. A widow in possession of her widow's estate in a zamindari made a grant of a patti tenure under it to a lessee at a rent. In this suit, brought by the reversionary heir, on her death, with the object of having the grant set aside as invalid as against him, the patti lease was not proved to have been made with authority or from necessity justifying the alienation by the widow. Held, that the patti was, on the death of the widow, only voidable, and not of itself void; so that the plaintiff, the next inheritor of the zamindari, might then elect to treat it as valid. MONIR SIKHAN SIKHAN v. 56. Accumulations by Hindu widow—Accumulations, period up to which they may be dealt with—Legacy to Hindu widow. The right of a Hindu widow to the income and accumulations of her husband's estate arising subsequently to his death is absolute, and is not affected by the fact that she may receive them in a lump sum; but whether she receives them as they fall due or after they have accumulated in the hands of others, her right is the same. The question to be sought for in determining her right to deal with such income and accumulations of income is one of intention. If she has invested her savings in such a manner as to show an intention to augment her husband's estate, she cannot afterwards deal with such investments, except for reasons which would justify her dealing with the original estate; but if she has evinced no such intention, she can, at any time during her life, deal with the profits. Where she invests her income making a distinction between the investments and the original estate, she can at any time thereafter deal with such investments, save in the case of the purchase of other property as a permanent investment. But should she invest her savings in property held by her without making any distinction between the original estate and the after-purchases, the prima facie presumption is that it has been her intention to keep the estate one and entire, and that the after-purchases are an increment to the original estate. CHAND CHITRADEI ROY v. ditions failed, and on the expiration of the term of eight years, the estate vested in the brother. The will made no provision for disposal of the rents and profits of the estate during the period the succession thereto was in abeyance. Disputes having arisen between the widow of the testator and his brother as to the right to such rents and profits, the brother eventually agreed to pay, and did pay, over to the widow a large sum by way of settlement of these disputes, for which sum the widow executed a release. The widow invested the sum so received in Government securities, and twenty years afterwards created with this fund a trust in favour of one Q C.

The death of the testator left funds as which the widow had no right to deal. Held, that, as the accumulations were handed over to the widow by the person entitled to the reversion after the estate had vested in him, and a release had been entered into between them, no presumption arose that the fund in question had been accumulated by the widow for the benefit of other heirs of the testator, and that, there being no such presumption, received by her for the benefit of any person but herself, or that she ever intended to give up the power of disposing, expending, or dealing with it in any way. SOWDAMINI DASSI v. BROODHON reversionary heirs to her late husband then sued her assignees for the property. There was no evidence that the widow had ever indicated any intention to make the property part of her husband's estate for the benefit of his heirs. Held, that there was no presumption that the widow intended to part with her power of disposition for the benefit of her reversionary heirs. The acquirer of property presumably intends to retain dominion over it, and in the case of a Hindu widow the presumption is none the less so when the fund with which the property is acquired is one which, though derived from her husband's property, was at her absolute disposal. Inasmuch as the widow's absolute power of disposition over the income derived from the widow's estate is now fully recognized, she will be presumed, in the absence of an indication of her as a means of enlarging her own estate or effecting alienations to strangers, as it will be an abuse of the limited power vested in her. The reversioner's right to validate alienations is not derived from the power to surrender. The former is analogous to the power of a tenant to consent to an alienation, of the next reversioners. Per SANKARAN-NAIR, J.—The document in this case must be construed as extinguishing the whole life estate of the widow. It amounts to a surrender of the whole to the reversioners and a reconveyance of part to the widow. A widow may alienate for necessary or for religious or charitable purposes, and in such cases, where reversioners consent, the consent is only evidence of necessity or fairness of the transaction, and it is not the consent, but the existence of facts evidenced by such consent, that validates the transaction. In cases not justifiable surrender will be valid, i.e., where it extinguishes the life estate. The assent of sapindas necessary

After the adoption, a suit was brought on the mortgage bond against A, and a decree was passed in terms of a compromise for payment by instalments, the mortgaged property remaining hypothecated as before. Default was made in payment of the instalments, and the decree-holder applied for execution of the decree, and B was substituted for A in the proceedings in execution. An objection was raised that the compromise decree was only a personal decree against A, and execution could not proceed against B. Held, that it was not a mere personal decree against A, but was binding on the estate inherited by B from his adoptive father. *Ishan Chunder Mitter v. 28. Decree against widow for husband's debt—Liability of family property—Execution—sale—Minor sons bound though not parties to suit—Suit by sons to redeem mortgage. One G died leaving him surviving a widow and two minor sons. The widow mortgaged some lands and a house to pay off a debt due by her husband. Subsequently a money decree was passed against her for another debt due by her husband, and the greater part of the mortgaged property was sold in execution and the equity of redemption thereof and praying for redemption. The lower Courts look to the substance of the transaction—question was whether the debt for which the property was sold was a joint family debt, and whether it was the equity of redemption in the entirety of the mortgaged property that was offered for sale, bargained for, and intended to be bought. It was obvious that, if the sons had been parties to the suit in which the decree had been passed, they

The widow as representing the estate is not bound to raise any defence when she is satisfied that the debt is really due. He was therefore entitled to a decree declaring that he was not bound by the sale of the 3rd November 1875, in the suit brought by J against B V as representative of her deceased husband, O T. Held, that whether the plaintiff was entitled to immediate possession of the property in the suit depended on the question whether B V's life-estate was defeasible on her re-marriage. She belonged to a caste in which re-marriage was permitted. further, that, though under the Hindu law a loss of caste by expulsion for specified reasons causes forfeiture of rights, it has never broken the relationship of the person expelled to those who remain within the caste, degradation having merely the effect of rendering the tie of kindred but dormant; and, e.g., the degradation of either spouse does not dissolve the tie of marriage. It is impossible to construct out of the Smritis and commentaries a consistent doctrine of "civil death" or "fiction of death." Prostitution does not sever the legal relation, and therefore the degradation of a woman in consequence of her unchastity does not in law entail a cessation of the tie of kindred between her and the members of her natural family or between her and the members of her husband's family. 1. — Power to make will—Origin and extent of power. Per NORMAN, J.—The power of a Hindu to make a will is not of modern introduction, nor is it of local origin. Will-were known to, and in use amongst, Hindus not in the presidency towns only, but from one end of the peninsula to the other. The right to make a will is part of the Hindu law itself. The extent and nature of the disposition which a Hindu testator is capable of making is not a question of public expediency or of custom or usage, but must be regulated by rules to be found in, or directly deduced from, Hindu law. GANENDRA MOHAN TAGORE v. UPENDRA MOHAN TAGORE . 4 B. L. R. O. C. 103

2. — Nature and extent of power. The testamentary power of disposition by Hindus has been established in Bengal by the decision of Courts of justice. The nature and extent of such power cannot be governed by any analogy to the law of England,—the English system being one of the most artificial character, founded in a great degree on feudal rules, regulated by Acts of Parliament and adjusted by a long course of judicial determination to the wants of a state of society differing as far as possible from that which prevails among Hindus in India. BUROOEN MOYEE DEBIA v. 8. — Power to dispose of self-acquired immoveable property after adopting a son. An adopted son does not stand in a better position, with regard to the self-acquired immoveable property of his adoptive father, than a natural-born son would occupy; and there is nothing in the Hindu law in this presidency to prevent a father from disposing by will of his self-acquired immoveable property, and so defeating the rights by inheritance of his adopted son. PRESNORAM SUARNA SUEWY v. Adoption of sons in succession. Where under the terms of a will the corpus of the estate was not to vest, until the happening of a certain event, it would in the meantime vest in the heir, and on the death of the heir (intestate) it would devolve on his heir. Executors and trustees of Hindu wills executed before the 1st September 1870 are merely managers and no estate vested in them. Sarat Chandra Banerjee v. Bhupendra Nath Basu, L. R. 25 Calc. 103, followed. A clause of defeasance in order to be operative must contain express words of necessary implication of a gift over to a definite person. The implication of a gift over to a second adopted son, who may never be adopted, cannot prevent the widow of the first adopted son from inheriting the share taken by the latter. Where a Hindu gave authority to his widow to adopt sons to him in succession, her power to adopt a second son would terminate on the first adopted son dying leaving a widow in whom the estate became vested. *Bhobunmoyee Debia v. These residuary bequests, it was provided, were not to take effect until after the death of the testator's widow, who was appointed executrix and manager of the whole estate during her life; but the estate was divided by the award of arbitrators in 1855, after making a provision for the widow, in substantial accordance with the directions of the will. V and L immediately thereafter took possession of their respective third shares of the moveable and immovable estate, but the third share allotted to the four sons of M, who were all still infants, remained unapportioned until 1856, when, on a suit being filed, the greater part of the moveable property was apportioned. The immovable property allotted to them remained unapportioned, and was managed, first, by the widow of M till her death in 1855; then by his eldest son K, till his death, without male issue, in 1859; then by the next eldest son V till his death, without issue, in 1864; and after.

Held, that to determine whether the will referred, in such bequest and power, only to the elder or to both of the testator's wives, extrinsic evidence of his intention was not admissible; but that the true construction was that which would indicate a reasonable and probable intention consistent with his views, as evidenced by his conduct, and his will generally. Abbott v. Middleton, 7 H. L. C. 339, referred to and followed. His views appeared to favour single heirship, and the whole state of things, as well as the language of the will, pointed to the owner of the estate being one;—Held, that accordingly the words “Maharani Sahiba” were not here used as a collective term for both widows, but signified only the elder, although, when qualified, as they were in another part of the will, they might include both. Held, also, that, as if there had been no will, the senior widow would have succeeded to an estate dependent on the determination of the life-estate to the senior, but subject to be defeated by an

The will of a Hindu contained the following devise in favour of the testator's grand-daughter K, who was unmarried at the date of the testator's death: “When K may marry, there is to be given to her out of my immovable property one house which has been purchased from Shah Virji, Narsi's widow Lilabai.

That (house) is to be given to Choru K as kanyadan. The rent, which it may yield, K may enjoy after (she) my grand-daughter shall have married. And after K's decease (the ownership of) the said house shall duly be enjoyed by K's children. If by the will of God K should die without (leaving) descendants, then my ‘Trustees’ are duly to take back the said house into their possession.” Held, that, under the above clause, K was entitled only to life estate in the house. *KARSANDAS NATHA v. 21. ———— Absolute estate—Request to sons with gifts over—Succession Act (X of 1865), ss 32 and 111—Absolute estate given This appeal related to three clauses in the will of a Hindu, who bequeathed his property to his two sons, one of whom had a son. The other son was childless, his only issue having died before the will was made. There were gifts over on the death of either son. The Courts below, construing the first of the three clauses, decided that each of the two sons took a life-interest in the property comprised in that clause, as tenants-in-common; and that the ulterior interest, not having been validly disposed of, fell into the residuary estate. On this appeal, with reference to s. 82 of “the Indian Succession Act, 1865,” made to apply to wills made by any Hindu in the town of Bombay, by s. 2 of the Hindu Wills Act, 1870, some doubt was expressed by the Judicial Committee whether in the clause it suffithat point. In the next clause to be construed there were words which had been held by the appellate High Court to give to each of the two sons of the testator only a life-estate in a half share of the residuary estate. Whether those words, which followed a gift to the testator's two sons of the whole residue in equal shares, were so clear that only this restricted interest was intended to be given to them, was considered, in like manner, to be open to doubt in regard to the rule of construction imposed by s. 82. But this was also not required to be determined, as this clause, the 13th in the will, was not applicable under the circumstances. It was now determined that the third and last of the disputed clauses, No. 18 in the will clearly gave the residuary estate to the testator's two sons in equal shares, each an absolute estate, except in the case of the subsequent birth of a son or daughter. The two clauses, 13 and 18, were not, in the Committee's opinion, intended to be read together and reconciled, nor were they mutually explanatory. They were each intended to provide for different circumstances. Held, that the two sons of the testator must be declared to have each taken an absolute interest in the half share of the residuary estate. *DADMODARDAS TAPIRAS v. In this manner moneys are to be paid as long as there may be son's heirs in my family. And when there may be no son (i.e.) male as heir in my family, the whole property shall be all used on religious and charitable account, as stated in the below-written clause 8. My two sons and my sister-in-law, making three persons, shall reside in the bungalow No 23. And if one of them, i.e., my two sons, V, shall disagree with the others, he shall go out of the said vadi at the Girgaum Back Road and reside elsewhere; and as to his (V's) expenses out of the money which my son G may receive from

held that, under the will, G was entitled to the property absolutely. Held, by the Appeal Court, that the proper construction of the will was that G was not entitled to an absolute estate, but was entitled to be paid by the trustees the income for his life, to be assigned by him as mentioned in the will. The circumstance that the estate was vested in trustees and that the income was given as maintenance forbade the estate given to G and V or either of them being construed as an absolute estate. Moreover, as such an estate would admit females in the course of succession, this construction would not give effect to the intention of the testator, but would be to make a new will for him. *VILLERDAS DAMODHAR v. ## Principles of construction of operative words in wills—

Effect of context upon technical or deadly disposing words used—Gift over—Male line, succession in—Malik—Putra putra di krame. Case of the construction of a will and codicil, dated in 1865 and 1868 respectively, in which it was held, that one L took a life-estate only, and that a gift over on failure of male issue of L at any remote time was bad. The word malik is consistent with a life-estate, and may well be applied to a person who owns an estate for life as well as to the absolute owner. Ordinarily, without other expressions indicating in what sense the word is used, it implies absolute ownership. The words putra putradi krame have always been understood as words of general inheritance, and, in the absence of a contrary intention being shown, would convey an absolute estate. But in construing both the word malik and the words putra putradi krame the expressions in the whole will must be taken together without anyone being insisted upon to the exclusion of others. Held, in this case, notwithstanding the words malik and putra putradi krame, that there being expressions excluding the succession of females and confining the succession to male heirs, and the gift over referring to the failure of male issue at any remote time, and not to the event of L's death without leaving male issue, is that technical words, or words of known legal import, must have their legal effect, even though the testator uses inconsistent words, unless those inconsistent words are of such a nature as to make it perfectly clear that the testator did not use the technical terms in their proper sense. Doe d. Gallini v. Gallini, 5 B. & Ad. 621, referred to and followed. In a Hindu will an heritable and alienable estate is to be understood by the use of the words "shall become mahik" unless the context indicates a different intention. The words putra poutradi krams have acquired a technical force, and are used as meaning an estate of inheritance. That a testator may have imperfectly understood the words which he has used, or the effects of conferring an hereditary estate, would not justify the giving an interpretation to his words other than following that he and becoming mahik of all my estate and properties shall enjoy, with son, grandson and so on in succession (putra poutradi krams) the proceeds of my estate." Provisions followed for the maintenance of this nephew's widow and of this daughter, should he die, and a gift over that, "in the absence of the said nephew's son, grandson, great-grandson, and so on, then of the sons born of my sisters . . . the eldest, with son, grandson and so on in succession, shall" receive the ownership. On a claim by the nearest gotraja-sapindas of the context, so as to establish any contrary meaning by making it clear that the words were not used in their proper sense, that there was no intention expressed to give a succession of life-estates to the nephew and his male issue only—a disposition which would not have accorded with Hindu law, but that an alienable and heritable estate was devised to him. Specified property was given by the will in trust for the income to be expended for

been merely void, without any effect upon the disposition of that estate. Made, however, as to property given for religious and charitable purposes, it was valid by Hindu law. No decision as to the effect of the gift over the secular heritable estate was required, inasmuch as the contingency upon which it was limited to go over had not occurred, and might not occur. *LALIT MOHUN SINGH ROY v. Use of words "putra poutradi krame"—Condition subsequent. In a will, the words "putra poutradi krame," recognized as apt for conveying an estate of inheritance, do not limit the succession to male descendants and will include female heirs of a female, where by law the estate would descend to such heirs. By his will a Hindu testator, after providing for various bequests, dealt with the residue of his estate as follows: "My daughter-in-law and grand-daughters shall receive half of my whole estate, and my wife and my adopted son shall receive the other half." On the question as to what was the nature and extent of the interest to which the testator's widow was entitled thereunder:—Held, that, having regard to the rule of construction which has been repeatedly applied to gifts by Hindus in favour of their wives, the intention of the testator was not that his wife should take an absolute estate. The supposition is that a Hindu donor intends to act in accordance with the ordinary notions and wishes of Hindus regarding the devolution and enjoyment of property among the members of his family. Though it was competent for the testator to provide for his wife in such a way that she should have absolute control over the property given her, that is not the provision which the Hindu law makes for a widow. The language of the will was not inconsistent with an intention on the part of the testator that the son, with his adoptive mother, provided that no person of the family of the fathers of his two wives should be able to exercise any control over the money and property left by the testator. Cl. 5 provided for the education of the testator's sister's son. The gift over was to the effect that anyone acting contrary to the terms of the will should be deprived of his interest which should, in due course, devolve on the other heirs. It was found on the evidence that forfeiture under cl. 4 of the will had been incurred by the defendant B, the younger widow of the testator, by reason of her having broken the condition relating to residence. Held, that s. 82 of the Indian Succession Act (X of 1865), which enacts that "where property is bequeathed to any person, he is entitled to the whole interest of the testator therein, unless it appears from the will that only a part of the interest

It was held that the birth of issue was the event on which the absolute gift of a half share to either daughter was to take effect; and that there was no reason for construing the words "have issue" to mean "leave issue." These properties shall, after her, be taken by her issue. In case my daughter may not perchance have any such issue, she should dispose of as she pleases all the properties she may have. In case she, perchance, being short-lived die before so attaining her age, the executors shall utilise those properties for dharmam." The daughter died issueless before attaining majority. The word is a compendious term referring to certain classes of pious gifts, and is not a mere vague and uncertain expression. The testator must be presumed to have used the word with reference to the definite objects inculcated by shastric precepts and well known to the people and therefore the gift to "dharmam" is not void for indefiniteness. *PARTHASARATHY PILLAI v. S, one of the sons, died after the testator's death without issue male, but leaving a widow his heiress at-law. Held, that, by the words "not leaving any son from his loins, nor any son's son," the testator meant not an indefinite failure of male issue, but a failure of male issue of any one of his sons at the time of the death of that son. Held, further, (i) that upon the death of S without male issue, his interest in the capital of the estate determined, and that his widow became entitled to hold and enjoy as a Hindu widow a fifth part of the accumulations from the testator's estate from the time of his death to the death of his son S; and (ii) that she was also entitled absolutely in her own right to the interest and accumulations which had since S's death arisen from such fifth part of the accumulations. By the decree S's widow was declared entitled to the R10,000 given by the will with the benefit of a residence in the family dwelling-house, and participations in the means of worship. The question of the amount of her maintenance as a Hindu widow was left open.

He had no male issue, but he had two daughters, who were the defendants in this suit. Shortly before his death, viz., on the 7th October 1883, he made a will (as stated therein) in accordance with in favour of the male issue of J was void under the rule laid down in the Tagore Case, 9 B. L. R. 377. L. R. I. A. Sup. Vol. 47 The testator plainly meant that the male issue of J living at the death of the survivor of the tenants for life should take the estate according to the rules of Hindu law, without distinguishing between those born in the lifetime of the testator and those born prior to that event, but subsequently to his death. At the death of the testator, J had no male issue, and the bequest was therefore a bequest to a person or persons not in being, and void. Held, also, regarding the subsequent creation of the Hindu law. It was not a gift over to him on an indefinite failure of his male issue. It came into force immediately on the death of the surviving tenant for life if at that time he should have had no male issue alive between the death of the testator and the latter event. If a son had been born to him after the testator's death, the gift to him could not have come into operation. It was only in the event of no son being born to him that he could take. It would not therefore make any difference that the testator made an ineffectual and inoperative disposition in favour of such son if born. The rule of the Tagore Case, that the gift of an estate to take effect after the failure of previously created invalid estates is void, did not apply. Held, further, that the power of appointment given by M P's will operated to confer ownership upon J after the death of B upon his executing his will, and that the bequests given by his will to his daughters, the defendants, were valid bequests. Held, on appeal, that the devise in M P's will in favour of the male issue of J meant in favour of such male issue as should be living at the time of the death of the survivor of the tenant for life, whether born in the lifetime of the testator or after his death; and as, at the death of the testator, J had no male issue, it was a gift to a person or persons not in being at that time, and therefore void under the rule in the Tagore Case. Held, also, that the devise over, in default of such male issue, was an alternative gift to take effect on an event to be determined at the death of the survivor of the tenant for life, and consequently was not open to objection. Held, further—as to the bequest to such person or persons as J should, by deed or writing, appoint—that there was no clear principle of Hindu law which forbade such a bequest being construed, and effect given to it, according to its plain and literal terms, always subject, how-when he made his will. Original Court's decree varied accordingly; the share in the residue appointed by J to his daughter M (born after the testator's death) being declared to be part of M P's

119. One member of such class in existence of date of gift—Will directing deed to be executed—Date of deed is date of gift. A Hindu died in 1856 leaving a will whereby he directed his widow and executrix L to purchase an estate worth Rs. 20,000 for his grand-son T, and that this estate should be conveyed to trustees, to be held by them in trust for T for his life or until his insolvency, and after his death for his son or other male heir. The executrix purchased the estate, but no trust deed was executed. T therefore brought a suit in 1871 to have the will carried out and a trust deed executed. T R (one of the plaintiffs in the present suit, who was T's uncle, was made a party to it at suit, and a consent decree was passed which ordered that the executrix L and T R should execute a trust deed in accordance with the directions in the will. A deed was accordingly executed in 1876 whereby the property was conveyed to trustees on the trusts declared in the will. At the time of the testator's death, T had no sons, but at the date of the deed in 1876 he had one son C and in 1883 another son G (the defendant) was born to him. T died in 1890, C died childless in 1901. The plaintiffs, who were T R, the son, and T R's son, the grandson, of the testator, now claimed the property. They contended that, as neither of T's sons were in existence at the date of the testator's death, they could not take under his will or under the deed which was afterwards executed to carry out the will; that, although at the date of the deed in 1876 one of the sons (C) was in existence, nevertheless he could only claim as one of a class, and that class was not ascertained or ascertainable at the date of the testator's death, nor at the date of the deed, G not having been born until 1883. The whole class was therefore excluded and the property after T's death was undisposed of. Held, that, in view of the direction of the will that a deed was to be executed which should declare the trusts of the property, it was the date of the deed subsequently executed which should be regarded in order to determine the validity of the limitations of the property bequeathed, and not the date of the testator's death, and that, under the deed, on the death of T, his son C became entitled to the property. In the case of a gift to a class if there is a person in existence at the time of the gift capable of taking and whom undoubtedly the donor intends to benefit, he is entitled to take, although others of the same class subsequently come into existence whom the donor meant the gift also to benefit, but who cannot take because of their non-existence at the date of the

120. *Request to "children"—Meaning of the expression "children"—Gift to a class—Gift of income as required under trust for accumulation of balance. Considerations which only show that a testator has made a disposition in his will which the Court is surprised to find there, though they might have determined the sense in which the testator had used an ambiguous expression, cannot of themselves lead the Court to refuse to give effect to the plain language he has employed, e.g., to read a bequest to "children" as a bequest to "sons" only. A bequest to "the children of R living at his decease," where some such children are in existence at the date of the will, need not be construed as a gift to a class of which some members might come into existence after the testator's death, when such a construction would manifestly defeat the primary object of the testator. A direction in a will to trustees to pay to a Hindu lady so much of certain dividends as she might from time to time require for her own use and support, etc., and to accumulate the surplus not required by her upon trusts, entitles the legatee to receive, if she requires it, the whole interest as it falls due, but not to claim afterwards amount which she did not require as they fell due, and which have been accumulated, and this is so whether the trust for which accumulation is directed is valid or invalid. testator's death, then effect should be given to such secondary intention but not otherwise. For the purpose of ascertaining those primary and secondary intentions, it is, of course, necessary to take all the material facts as to the testator's family into consideration and to read the various provisions of his will as a whole. A gift in a will to widows of sons is, in the case of Hindus, a gift to a class, as Hindus by their law are permitted to have more than one wife at the same time. Ram Lal v. Kanai Lal, I. L. only the remaining amount of profit according to their respective shares in perpetuity. At the same time, the Court held good a provision for defraying the marriage expenses of sons from joint funds, with the direction in the will that until the youngest son should attain majority none of the sons should have a right to partition; any son who should separate from the others getting, up to the time of his attaining majority, merely maintenance, and not the profits accruing upon his share. ## (m) RESIDUARY ESTATE.

139. ————— Residue undisposed of—Balance undisposed of, disposition of—Bequest to heir, effect of, on his right to residue—Disinheritance. In a suit in which a will of one L C was alleged to be a forgery:—Held, on the evidence, that the will of L C was genuine. By the said will, L C had directed R25,000 to be paid to the plaintiff's mother and her family. He appointed the defendant's father (T L) his executor, and balance was a residue undisposed of by the will, and that the plaintiff was entitled to a half share of such residue which was to be divided as if there was no will. But the business itself from the date of the testator's death was to go to T L. Mere bequests of special portions of the testator's estate to the heir without language of disinheritance do not exclude him from the undisposed of residue. TOOLSEIDAS LUDHA v. PREMJI TRICUMDAS I. ## (n) SURVIVORSHIP.

140. ————— Gift to two persons for life jointly—Gift to a daughter and her children—Effect of power giving to a daughter if she had no children to dispose of property bequeathed by will—Bequest for house expenses—Bequest by testator of his wife's ornaments—Election. J, a Hindu inhabitant of Bombay, died in November 1869, leaving a will, dated October 1869. He left a widow and one child, the plaintiff M, then about fourteen years of age. She had then been married for two years, but up to the time of this suit she had had no children. By this will the testator directed that his immoveable property in Bombay should be formed into a trust, and that the trustees were to collect the income thereof. By the fourteenth and fifteenth clauses of his will he directed that out of the trust fund R50 per month were to be paid both to his wife and daughter for their personal expenses. In the seventh clause he directed as follows: "After deducting expenses . . . money is to be paid out of the net income, whatever it may amount to, for the personal expenses of my wife and my daughter M, and for the children of my daughter M after her death agreeably to the fourteenth and fifteenth clauses of this will; and after paying the same, whatever income may remain is to be paid for the purposes of my wife and my daughter M and her children in such manner as my trustees may think proper." The eighth clause directed that, if M should have children, the trust should stand valid during the lifetime, and the trust-property should then be apportioned amongst the heirs. It then proceeded: "But should there be no children born of the womb of my daughter M, then after the death of M and my wife this trust is to become void, and the property delivered to such persons as my daughter M may direct it to be delivered by making her will." Held, (i) that the direction in the seventh clause amounted to a gift of the residue for the use of the testator's wife and M; that his wife and M were, under the clause, entitled to the income of the fund in equal shares during their joint lives, and that the survivor would take the whole for her lifetime. (ii) That M having no children at the date of the testator's absolute gift to her if she gave the requisite direction by will. The gift did not offend against the rule in the Tagore case. The persons to whom the property is given would take it from M, and not from the testator. The testator by his will further directed that R750 a month were to be paid to his wife for the purpose of defraying the expenses of the house and the worship of thakur (God). Held, that no part of this sum could be awarded to M. The testator expected that she would live with the testator's wife and made no provision for the event of her ceasing to do so. The testator also disposed of ornaments described as "my own and my wife's ornaments." Held, that the clause did not raise a question of election. The wife's stridhan ornaments would not fall within the clause if there were other ornaments which she wore, and of which the testator had power to dispose. RAT MANJURJI v. DOSA MORARJI . I. L. in a suit was whether certain property which a Hindu testator had purported to deal with by his will was his self-acquired property or was the family property of the testator and his son and grandson. Held, that the separate property of the testator would be (i) property acquired by his own exertions, (ii) without the aid of family funds, (iii) which he did not mix with family property with the intention of adding it to the family funds. Also, that a statement contained in the will was not evidence on the question whether the property dealt with by the will was or was not self-acquired, nor was the conduct of the testator's son in not objecting to the will, nor was a so-called reference to arbitration by the son and grandson. The fact that the property in the hands of the testator had increased during a long period to a considerable value from a small nucleus of family property was not sufficient to rebut the presumption that it was all family property. *Ramanna v. HUNDI—contd.

2. ACCEPTANCE.

1. — Communication of acceptance to holder and drawer—Omission by drawer to notify non-acceptance. An insolvent firm had drawn certain hundis on the plaintiffs payable to the defendant. The defendant had endorsed them to one M. The plaintiffs' Bombay firm was the agent of M, and M accordingly sent the hundis to the plaintiffs, as his agents, for realization. The hundis, however, were dishonoured, and M thereupon returned them to the defendant, and received their value from the defendant, who in this suit sought to get off the amount on this ground.

30th October the plaintiffs had stated by letter to the drawer's firm that the hundis had been accepted. That meant that all things had been done to make the acceptance complete. The absence of entries in the plaintiffs' book, with reference to the hundis, afforded no inference that they were not accepted. Semle: A communication of acceptance to the drawer, or to a previous holder, binds the acceptor as well as a communication to the present holder, inasmuch as the acceptance enters for the benefit of them as well as for the actual holder, and the primary contract is between the drawer and the acceptor. PRADAS THAKURDAS v. DOWLATRAM NANTRAM. 1 L. R. 11 Bom. 257

2. — Acceptance of hundi as conditional or absolute payment. In a suit for the amount due on account of goods sold and delivered and money lent, the defence was that plaintiff had accepted hundis in discharge of the debt and was in consequence debarred from suing on the original consideration, and that his remedy, if he had one, was on the hundis. It was also contended that the hundis had been accepted as cash payment, in consideration of a discount of 2½ per cent. and that, in consequence, plaintiff had no

3. ENDORSEMENT

1. — Necessity for endorsement—Hundi given for particular purpose—Hundi payable to order. A party who receives a hundi for a particular purpose must apply the same accordingly, and neither he nor any third party knowing the facts can by afterwards receiving the amount detain the same from the principal. Quare: Whether a hundi made payable "to order" is, according to Hindu law and the custom of native merchants, negotiable without a written endorsement by the payee. RAJ-ROOPRAM v. RUDDOC

1 Ind. Jur. O. S. 93; 1 Hyde 155

2. — Assignment of hundi—Bills of Exchange Act, V of 1866. A hundi which contains a direction on sufficient consideration to the drawee and accepted by him is within the terms of the Bills of Exchange Act, and such a document is assignable without any regular form of endorsement if sufficient cause appears in the handwriting of an endorser to indicate an intention to assign it. EAST INDIA BANK v. VOLLIE GOOLWANY
[1 Ind. Jur. N. S. 247

3. — Proof of endorsement—Power of endorser to sue. Where a hundi had been endorsed to purchasers who subsequently returned it possession that he had a right to it, unless the contrary were shown. BYRNATH SAHOO v. BACHU RAM. 1 Ind. Jur. N. S. 78; 5 W. R. 86

4. — Cancellation of endorsement—Endorse for purposes of collection, liability of. An endorsee for purposes of collection of certain hundis, under the circumstances, ordered to cancel such endorsement and to re-deliver the hundis to the endorser. Such an endorsee not having received the amount of the hundis, was held, under the circumstances, not liable to be sued for the value thereof. GYANEE RAM v. PALEE RAM 2 N. W. 73

5. — Suit after endorsement—Bill payable to depositors—Member of joint family. A hundi payable to the depositor is only payable to the drawer or his endorsee. When the drawer and his brother are members of an undivided Hindu family, it may be presumed that the latter is entitled to act for the former. VELIET DOS v. BENARESSEE ROY. W. R. 1864, 262

and sent by him to the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs handed the hundi to one S, the plaintiffs' jemadar who had been in the habit of taking hundis on their behalf for acceptance and payment, to be taken by him to the defendants for acceptance. S took the hundi to the defendants, but subsequently, one R, who had no authority from the plaintiffs to receive payment, acting on information either from S or from some other source, represented himself to the defendants as a jemadar of the plaintiffs, wrongfully obtained the hundi from the defendants, forged the plaintiffs' signature to it, and obtained payment. The defendants, before such payment, had made no inquiries as to the position or respectability of R, and paid the hundi on the faith of the forged signature. Held, that such an endorsement, coupled with the delivery of the hundi, entitles the plaintiffs to sue for and receive payment of the hundi from the acceptors, though as between the drawer and the plaintiffs the latter are mere agents or parties with a defeasible title. Such an endorsement is in the nature of a restrictive endorsement, giving the endorsee the right to receive payment of the hundi and if necessary to sue the acceptor for the amount, but not to transfer his rights as endorsee to another.

hundi continued to be shahjoge even after such endorsement. Gones Dass v. Luchmi Narayan, I. L. R. 18 Bom 570, referred to. Held, also, that the plaintiffs were entitled to claim the amount and fraudulently obtained payment from defendants, there was no negligence on the part of the plaintiffs, 1851), ss. 70, 71, 75, and 137. The plaintiff as holder and indorsee of a hundi drawn on one H of Buhire sued defendant as payee and indorser to recover Rs. 1,193-4 on a hundi which had been dishonoured by the acceptor. It was found by the Court (i) that the local usage at Buhire was to present the hundi for payment at the bank, and for the acceptor to call at the bank at due date and effect settlement; (ii) that the hundi in question was presented for payment to the authorized agent of the acceptor at the bank on the due date; (iii) that the said agent refused payment and informed the bank that the acceptor would not pay the hundi. It was argued that presentment at the bank was not good presentment having regard to ss. 70, 71, and 137 of the Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881). Held, that the local usage made the presentment a good presentment. IMPERIAL BANK OF PERSE.

In a suit by a creditor to recover from his debtor and her husband the amount of money lent by the plaintiff to the former on her notes of hand, it appeared that the defendants had always lived together, that the wife had an allowance wherewith to meet the household expenditure and all her personal expenses, and that the money had been borrowed without the husband's knowledge, and not to meet any emergent need, but to pay off previous debts, and had been raised by successive borrowings over a considerable period, the debts having increased by high rates of interest. It was also found that it had not been shown that the plaintiff looked to the husband's credit, or that the husband had ever previously paid his wife's debts for her. Held, that, under these circumstances, no agency on the wife's part for her husband had been established, and that the husband was therefore not liable to the claim. *GIRDHARI LAL v. 1. ——— Right to bastard's estate—Forfeiture—Non-assertion of claim by Crown—Escheat. M, the widow and administratrix of a bastard who had died intestate and without issue, received a letter in 1841 from the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury stating that they did not deem it expedient to take any steps for the assertion of the rights of the Crown with regard to her late husband's estate. Previous to this, M had obtained possession of that estate, and two months before the receipt of the letter she had contracted a second marriage. No settlement was made upon this marriage, and since the time of the marriage, M's second husband had had the exclusive management of the property. In execution of a decree against the husband, his right, title, and interest in and to a portion of the property were put up for sale and purchased by the plaintiff. mitation Act (XV of 1877), s. 24—Continuing wrong. In 1882 a calingula was constructed by Government for the purpose of reducing the

ago channel was formed by Government to carry off the surplus water. Plaintiffs contended that the drainage channel was not sufficient to carry off the water and that the water which flowed over the calingula stagnated on their lands and made them unfit for cultivation. They prayed for a mandatory injunction directing that the calingula be blocked up. Held, that they were entitled to the relief claimed. Government have the right to distribute the water of Government channels for the benefit of the public subject to the rights of a ryotwari land-holder, to whom water has been supplied by Government, to continue to receive such supply as is sufficient for his accustomed requirements. But the rights of Government in connection with the distribution of water do not include a right to flood a man's land because, in the opinion of Government, the erection of a work, which has this effect, is desirable in connection with the general distribution of water for the public benefit. The fact that the opening of the calingula was necessary for the protection of the tank, and the fact that there was no negligence in the con-construct the calingula in question, it would be for Government to show that they could not exercise their statutory powers without injuring the plaintiffs' lands. The position of persons acting under statutory authority discussed. Held, also, that the injury was a continuing one and that the suit was governed by s. 24 of the Limitation Act and was not barred by limitation. 3. — Water-course—Construction of new channel—Prior to construction water flowed naturally or percolated without definite course—Material alteration. Plaintiff sued for an injunction to restrain defendant from making or using a water channel. Prior to the construction of the channel, all the water that flowed from the defendant's land on to the plaintiff's found its way there by natural flow or percolation and was not carried down by any definite water course. The effect of the channel was to collect water, which formerly flowed from a large tract of land at different points in a definite channel and to throw it all into a particular part of the plaintiff's channel. Held, that plaintiff was entitled to the relief sought. Even though no greater quantity of water might eventually be carried into plaintiff's channel than had hitherto run into it, the new channel effected a material alteration in the mode

5. — Land Revenue Code (Bombay Act I of 1879), s. 53—Grantee of Royal share of revenue or of soil—Miras tenant—Enhancement of rent—Sheri lands—Contractual relation—Usage of the locality—Enhancement to be just and reasonable. A grant to an Inamdar may be either of the Royal share of revenue or of the soil; but ordinarily it is of the former description and the burden rests on the Inamdar to show that he is an alienee of the soil. Where an Inamdar is alienee only of the land revenue, then his relations towards those who hold land within the area of the Inam grant, vary according to certain well-recognized principles. If the holding was created prior to the grant of the Inam, then the Inamdar as such can only claim land-revenue or assessment; tenants in possession of them, even if only a grantee of revenue. With respect to the latter class of holding, direct contractual relations would be established between the Inamdar and the holder. If no such contract can be proved, recourse must be had to s. 83 of the Land Revenue Code (Bombay Act V of 1879). In the absence of satisfactory an Inamdar to enhance rent of Miras land, it must be determined whether what was paid was rent and whether the Inamdar has a right to enhance as against one, who holds on the same terms as the defendant does; the test is whether there has been any and what enhancement according to the usage of the locality in respect of land of the same description held on the same tenure. RAJYA v. Plaintiff, as the assignee of a mortgage executed by the father of first defendant, sued the mortgagor, in 1894, on the mortgage. During the pendency of the suit, and before the decree in it was passed, the mortgagor died. Plaintiff thereupon brought the first defendant on the record, as legal representative, under s. 386 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In December, 1894, a decree for sale was passed which was never impeached as being fraudulent or collusive. As a fact first defendant was not the sole legal representative of the mortgagor, who left two other sons and three daughters. The second son was, at a date subsequent to the decree, assessed to pay income-tax for arrears of which the mortgaged property was sold (under the Revenue Recovery Act), and purchased by second defendant in 1896. In 1897 the mortgaged property was sold in execution of the decree in plaintiff's suit on the mortgage, and plaintiff became the purchaser, the sale being confirmed soon after, and plaintiff obtaining a sale certificate which purported to convey the whole of the mortgaged property to him, and obtaining delivery of whom he alleges to be the legal representative of the deceased defendant, such person sufficiently represents the estate of the deceased for the purposes of the suit, and, in the absence of fraud or collusion, the decree passed in the suit will bind the estate. Held, lastly, that the sale in execution of plaintiff's decree, subsequently to the second defendant's purchase in the revenue sale, extinguished second defendant's equity of redemption. On the introduction of British rule, the British Government recognised the proprietary title of the then Chief over some only of the villages, which formerly formed the Pergunnah of Tank, by con-

The effect of s. 30 of the Income Tax Act is not to convert income-tax into an arrear of land revenue, due in respect of the land which may be brought to sale . . .

the above and certain other deductions. In a suit brought by the plaintiff against the defendant in which the former claimed the whole estate, the Chief Court gave the plaintiff the decree asked for and further put the defendant on his election as to "which maintenance he was to take," viz, the village given him by the Chief or the cash allowance made by Government. Held, that the Chief Court the defendant ought not to have been put to his election as to the cash allowance and the assignment of the village, as the two grants had arisen from different sources and were independent of each other. The question whether the grant of the vil-

13. ———— Stay of sale in execution of decree—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 92. Certain immovable property was attached in execution of a decree obtained by F against N. A claim was made by S, who alleged that the property was his, and that he was entitled to execute his decree against the property in dispute. N was subsequently made a party to the suit under s. 73 of Act VIII of 1859. From the order granting the injunction L appealed to the High Court. Held, that this was not a proper case for the issue of an injunction under s. 92. There was nothing to show that the property in dispute was in danger of being wasted, damaged, or alienated by L, nor was the property in his possession. The proper course would have been for S to have applied by petition for a postponement of the sale, the attachment continuing. The Court ordered the injunction to be dissolved, and that an order should be entered on the execution proceedings staying the sale pending S's suit, leaving it open to L, in case there should be

17. ———— Injunction to stay sale pending suit to establish title—Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 492—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 92—Superintendence of High Court under s. 622, Civil Procedure Code, 1882. A claim by R to certain property which had been attached by B in the Code of 1882 has, and was intended to have, wider application than s. 92 of Act VIII of 1859 had, and provides a remedy where property is "in danger of being wrongfully sold;" if the circumstances justified it, an order could have been obtained under that section from the Court of the second Subordinate Judge to stay the sale. There being this alteration in the law, and such a remedy provided, and no express provision in the Code for stay of execution by a Court executing a decree on the application of a third party, the order of the first Subordinate Judge was made without jurisdiction, and should be set aside. *In the matter of the petition of BROJENDRA KUMAR RAI CHOWDHURI, BROJENDRA KUMAR RAI CHOWDHURI v. performance of an alleged agreement between themselves and the defendants, under which they were, on certain terms, entitled to the use and occupation of the dock until the repairs of two of their vessels were completed; and for an injunction to restrain the defendants from ejecting them until the completion of the repairs. In support of an application for an interim injunction to restrain the defendants from taking proceedings to eject the plaintiffs until their suit had been heard, the affidavits of the plaintiffs stated that on the faith of the agreement one of their steamers had been docked and taken to pieces; that the repairs could not be finished for a considerable time, and that the vessel could not be removed from the dock without great loss and irreparable injury to them. The affidavits

ment having come to an end, they were entitled to reject the plaintiffs; they did not deny the loss to the plaintiffs which would be the result of moving the vessel before repairs were completed, nor did they allege any delay in making the repairs, but they submitted that such loss would be the consequence of the plaintiffs' own act in docking their vessel without any final agreement having been come to between the parties. The dock was situated in the district of Hooghly, and the defendants' suit for possession unless transferred to the High Court, would be tried in the Hooghly Court. There were facts which, in the opinion of the Court, went to show that the plaintiffs had acted bona fide. Held (per BLACKBURN, J.), on the above facts, that, inasmuch as the plaintiffs' statements, if true, raised a fair and substantial question for decision as to the rights of the parties, and looking to the inconvenience of allowing the same matter to be litigated simultaneously in different Courts between the same parties, the plaintiffs were entitled to an interim injunction restraining the defendants from bringing their suit until the plaintiffs' suit was heard. Semle: An interim injunction may issue, although there is a contradiction on the facts. On appeal the Court was of opinion that, under the circumstances, there was an equity which entitled the plaintiffs to be kept in quiet and undisturbed possession of the dock until the repairs were completed, and confirmed the order for an interim injunction but modified it by restraining the defendants not from bringing their suit, but merely from executing any decree they might obtain therein until the plaintiffs should have had a reasonable time to complete the repairs of their vessel. Although by the Letters Patent of 1863 the provisions of Act VIII of 1859 were not expressly made applicable to the High Court, as was done by the Letters Patent of 1862, semle: the order granting the injunction was an order under s. 82, Act VIII of 1859, and therefore an appeal lay under s. 94. *MONAN & RIVERS STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY v. 14 B. Plaintiffs now complained that defendants had, in breach of their agreement arranged to consign, and had already made consignments of, mica to another firm, and were keeping mica in stock. Plaintiffs filed this suit for specific performance, and for an injunction restraining defendants from acting in violation of the terms of the agreement. A temporary injunction was subsequently applied for and obtained. Upon an appeal being preferred by defendants against the order granting the temporary injunction. Held, that the injunction was rightly granted. The granting of such an injunction, under s. 493 of the Code of Civil Procedure, is a matter of judicial discretion. Quære—Whether the principles which govern the grant of a temporary injunction under the Code of Civil Procedure are the same as those which are laid down in the Specific Relief Act relating to the grant of a perpetual injunction. *Nusservanji Merwanji Panday v. On the 1st January 1881, the mill recommenced working, having been idle for two years. On the 26th January 1881, a notice was sent to the defendants to discontinue the working of the mill on pain of a suit. The defendants replied denying the nuisance and stating that any suit would be defended. The suit was filed on the 5th February 1881. The plaintiffs alleged a nuisance, especially to the tenants of the eastern block of the Grant Buildings, arising from the noise, smoke, and cotton fluff and smells issuing from the defendants' mill. They complained that the said nuisance would be much increased when the defendants carried out their intention of completing the number of spindles and looms for which the mill was built. They prayed for an injunction and Rs. 1,000 damages. The defendants denied the alleged nuisance, and contended that the plaintiffs were debarred from the relief claimed. At the time of the filing of the suit the only rooms in the Grant Buildings that were vacant were the following: In the east block two rooms in Division No. 1, one room in Division No. 3, and one room in Division No. 4. In the west block five rooms were vacant. The total net rental of the vacant rooms was Rs. 350 a month, and of the occupied rooms Rs. 2,410. Evidence was given that many tenants had vacated their rooms in the east block on account of the nuisance experienced from the mill, but that the suit four rooms were vacant in the east block and none in the west block. Between the date of the filing of the suit and the hearing, changes had been effected in the mill which decreased the nuisance, — e.g., new boilers were erected, smokeless coal was used, screens, steam-jets, and baffleplates were introduced. filed on the 5th February 1881. The plaintiffs alleged a nuisance, especially to the tenants of the eastern block of the Grant Buildings, arising from the noise, smoke, and cotton fluff and smells issuing from the defendants' mill. They complained that the said nuisances would be much increased when the defendants carried out their intention of completing the number of spindles and looms for which the mill was built. They prayed for an injunction and R1,000 damages. The defendants denied the alleged nuisance, and contended that the plaintiffs were debarred from the relief claimed. At the time of the filing of the suit the only rooms in the Grant Buildings that were vacant were the following: In the east block two rooms in Division No. 1, one room in Division No. 3, and one room in Division No. 4. In the west block five rooms were vacant. The total net rental of the vacant rooms was demand for rooms was so great that other tenants were found to fill the vacancies almost as soon as they occurred. At the time of the hearing of the suit four rooms were vacant in the east block and none in the west block. Between the date of the filing of the suit and the hearing, changes had been effected in the mill which decreased the nuisance,—e.g., new boilers were erected, smokeless coal was used, screens, steam-jets, and baffles were introduced. In order to diminish the noise, double fixed windows were put in on the north side of the changes and improvements made by the defendants after the filing of the suit for the purpose of diminishing the nuisance complained of depended so much on the good intention and constant personal care of the defendants and their servants that it ought not to influence the question of injunction when once the nuisance was proved to have existed; (5) that although (the plaintiffs being at the date of the suit entitled only to complain of the nuisance as to four out of sixty-eight sets of rooms) it might be said there was no material diminution of the value of the property arising from the nuisance, to apply in case the noise be materially increased beyond what it is at present. On appeal: Held per BAYLEY, C.J. (Acting), and WEST, J., that admitting that money compensation was a right form of relief, it should be compensation measured by the premises not owned, but occupied by the plaintiffs; in other words, the rooms unlet. It was only in respect of these that the plaintiffs were competent to sue, and they could not be entitled to

It would be unreasonable that the defendants should be made to pay as damages in bulk to persons not legally entitled what they might have to pay over again to those who are or may be entitled in detail. For the damages arising to the plaintiffs on account of the rooms unlet at the institution of the suit Rs. 1,000 would afford sufficient compensation, and the sum awarded should be reduced to that amount. 69. Suits by agents of company to restrain it from carrying into effect a resolution of directors—Power to appoint solicitors to company—Practise. By the Memorandum and Articles of Association of the new Dharamsey Poonjalboy Spinning and Weaving Company, the plaintiffs, firm of M F & Co. were appointed agents of the company for twenty-five years, and it was provided that they should have the general control and management of the Company. Cl. 98 of the Articles provided that the said firm, as such agents, should have full power and authority (inter alia) to appoint and employ, in or for such agreement, entered into between the company and the partners etc., and particularly to exercise all the powers contained in cl. 98 of the Articles of Association. Messrs. G & B were duly appointed solicitors to the company, and acted as such for a considerable time. Merwanji Framji, one of the members of the said firm of M F & Co., died in the middle of March 1876. The plaintiffs complained that G, one of the shareholders in the company, became desirous of ousting the plaintiffs from the position of agents of the company, and of becoming the managing director of the company; that in July 1881 he procured his own election and that of certain nominees of his as directors of the company; and on the 6th August 1881 procured the passing of a resolution at a board meeting to the effect that as

be made, and that business of the company. The plaintiffs alleged that the only object of passing the said resolution was to facilitate the design of G of ousting the plaintiffs from their agency, and getting the management of the company for himself; that Messrs. H C & L had been for a long time the solicitors of G, and had been advising him in his designs upon the company and upon the plaintiffs, and they contended that the resolution was a breach of the contract between the company and the plaintiffs and a violation of the Articles of Association of the company. The plaintiffs sued G and two other directors of the company and the company itself, and prayed for an injunction against the defendants to restrain them from committing any breach of the agreement of 26th August 1874, and in particular from carrying into effect the resolution appointing Messrs H C & L as solicitors for the company, and to restrain them from doing anything inconsistent with the Memorandum and Articles of Association. The defendants contended that the contract of the 26th August 1874 had been determined by the death of Merwanji Framji, and that the powers conferred on the agents by cl. 98 of the Articles were, subject to the general powers of management, vested in the directors by the Articles, and that the case was not one in which an injunction could be granted. It being admitted that the conduct of the defendants would be supported by the company in general meeting owing to their having a preponderance of votes:—Held, that, inasmuch as the Court would not, by a decree for specific performance or by injunction, compel the Company to retain the plaintiffs in the confidential position of agents, it would not restrain the defendants or the company from appointing a solicitor, which was only a violation of what was ancillary or the Court would not interfere on behalf of the plaintiffs. NESSERWANJI F GORDON

72. — Infringement of patent—Label—Details different but general similarity likely to deceive. The plaintiffs sued the defendant for an infringement of their label used on tins of aniline dye, which they imported into Bombay. green, red, and gold representations, for the most part, of coins, medals, and tracing. The defendant was the agent in Bombay of Cassella & Co. of Frankfort. Prior to 1892, Cassella & Co. had imported aniline dye into Bombay in tins bearing a label, the chief feature of which was an elephant. Of that label however, the plaintiffs did not complain. But in January 1892, Cassella & Co. adopted a new label, also bearing the picture of an elephant different in some respects from the picture on the plaintiffs' label and with new surroundings, to none of which, taken separately, did the plaintiffs object, but they complained that in its general effect this new label was so similar to their trade mark as to amount to a colourable imitation thereof, and to be likely to deceive purchasers. Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to an injunction against the defendant. Per SARGENT, C.J.—The question in a case of this description is not what would be the effect on brokers or even dealers in Bombay, but how the label would be likely to strike incautious or unwary purchasers, such as are to be found more particularly in the mofussil. After a careful examination, I cannot feel any doubt that the attention of such purchasers would be arrested by the possible for a label no part of which is a copy of another label, to be a colourable imitation of that other label and to be like it in general appearances as to be likely to deceive purchasers. BADISCHE, ANILINE, AND SODA FABRIK v. MANECKJI SHAFURJI KATRAK

73. — Interlocutory application—Ad interim injunction to restrain defendant from using plaintiff's alleged trade mark—Overwhelming prima facie case—Irreparable injury. Where the plaintiffs by an interlocutory application sought to restrain the defendants from using the word "camelhair" in respect of certain belting sold by them alleging that in so using the words there was a false representation that the defendants' said goods were of the plaintiffs' manufacture: Held, that the plaintiffs' right to an ad interim injunction depended on their making out a strong, if not an overwhelming prima facie case that the words complained of signified that the belting was exclusively of the plaintiffs' manufacture and that the use of the description was such as was calculated to deceive purchasers into the belief that they were purchasing goods to the plaintiffs' manufacture, and that irreparable injury might be done, if the relief sought were not given. *Reddaway v. ## (o) MINING OPERATIONS.

74. ———— Temporary injunction—Mining operations commenced by defendant under bond fide claim of title—Loss to plaintiff from non-cultivation—Balance of convenience—Standing by—Principles on which temporary injunction should be granted. The Defendant Company acting under a bond fide claim of right began to cut an incline and sink a pit for the purpose of working the minerals in certain lands and had already finished constructing a railway siding when the plaintiffs sued for a declaration of their under-ground rights in the said lands and for a permanent injunction restraining the Defendant of first instance granted a temporary injunction mainly on the ground that the object of the suit would be frustrated, if the Defendant Company were allowed materially to alter the features of the locality. Held, that in making this order the Court had overlooked certain material consideraproportion to the loss apprehended by the plaintiffs, especially as the plaintiffs (of whose title there was no evidence) would, if successful, be able to recover damages from the Company, which was a substantial one and which did not enter as a mere wanton trespasser. Moreover, it appeared that the plaintiffs stood by for a considerable time whilst the Defendant Company was spending a large amount of money over the works sought to be stopped. This is a circumstance of considerable importance in dealing with an application for injunction, especially in the case of a mining Company. SINGARAN COAL SYNDICATE v. INDRA NATH CHATTERJEE (1906)

4. REFUSAL OF INJUNCTION

Execution—Decree restraining defendant in user of land—Sale of land in execution of another decree—Purchaser at such sale in possession—No execution granted of former decree. The plaintiff obtained a decree restraining the defendant in his user of certain land, and applied for execution. Meanwhile the land had been sold in execution of another decree against the defendant, and the purchaser at the Court-sale obtained possession. The plaintiff thereupon applied that the purchaser should be made a party to the execution proceedings and that execution should go against him as well as against the defendant. Held, that no order for execution could be made. It could not go against the defendant, as all his interest in the land had been sold in execution of a decree; and it could not go against the purchaser, as an injunction does not run with the land. There was no attempt at concealment, and the accused made a full confession. Held, that, as the accused was conscious of the nature of his act, he must be presumed to have been conscious of its criminality. ## I. CASES UNDER ACT XXVIII OF 1865.

1. Order for winding up estate

—Effect of an execution proceeding—Leave to proceed —Laches—Right of assignees and creditors. An order made under Act XXVIII of 1865 for the winding up of the estate of a deceased debtor execution-creditor to proceed notwithstanding the winding up order. Such leave was not to be given except upon special grounds. Laches of the execution-creditor was an obstacle to his obtaining such leave. Under the Insolvent Debtors Act (1 & 2 Vict., c. 110, English Repealed Act; 11 & 12 Vict., c. 21, India), the mere delivery of the writ of f. fa. to the sheriff or his deputy for execution bound the goods as against the assignees in insolvency, subject to the right of the executioncreditor to have satisfaction of his debt by sale.

 But in bankruptcy the law is otherwise. The execution must be levied by seizure and sale before the date of the fiat or the filing of the petition for adjudication; otherwise the execution-creditor is entitled only to a rateable part of his debt with the other creditors. FINANCIAL ASSOCIATION OF INDIA

It does not confer title. An order of attachment under s. 268 only operates so as to give the judgment-creditor certain rights in execution. It does not operate, when those rights are not exercised before the presentation of a petition in insolvency, so as to create in favour of the judgment-creditor a title which prevails against that of the Official Assignee, under the vesting order in insolvency made after the order of attachment. The plaintiff in a suit obtained an order for attachment before judgment of a sum of money belonging to the defendant. In due course a decree was obtained and subsequently to the decree the judgment-debtor was declared an insolvent. The Official Assignee then preferred a claim to the money under attach-sion until the 30th September 1896, when he gave them up to the plaintiff. The plaintiff brought this suit against the defendant for the rent (R750) due from 1st April 1896 to the 30th September 1896. Held, that the defendant was liable. By entering into possession on the 30th August 1896, the defendant had elected to accept the lease and had thereby become assignee of it. The acceptance dated back the vesting order, and the Official Assignee (the defendant) became liable for the rent during the period that he continued to be assignee, his liability ending when with the landlord's consent he surrendered the term. ABDUL RAZAK v KERNAN

The claim was for payment of a debt, and in default to obtain an order for the sale of land upon which the creditor averred that he held an equitable mortgage by deposit of title-deeds with him, before the adjudication, as security for the debt. Held, that the burden was upon the plaintiff of proving the deposit by way of equitable mortgage to have preceded the adjudication. By an order, dated the 9th July 1879, A was declared an insolvent under s. 351 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), and his property vested in the receiver, who was ordered to convert it into money. Nine fields, which were part of A's property, had been mortgaged to the plaintiff, who was duly cited to appear and prove his debt. The plaintiff, however, failed to appear, and ha was consequently omitted from the schedule of A's creditors. The receiver sold one of the fields which was purchased by A's undivided son, G. At the sale the plaintiff gave notice of his claim as mortgagee. After paying off the debts of the scheduled creditors, the receiver made over to A the residue of the purchase-money and the eight unsold fields. In 1881 the plaintiff sued A for possession of the mortgaged property, and on appeal obtained a decree. While that suit was pending, G sold to the defendant the field which he had purchased. In execution of his decree, the plaintiff recovered possession of the eight fields, but on attempting to get possession of the ninth field he was obstructed by the defendant, who was in possession, and he consequently brought this suit to recover it. Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover it from the defendant. The only interest the insolvent had in the mortgaged premises was the equity of redemption, and this having vested in the receiver under s. 354, he under s. 356 was directed to convert it into money. G therefore at the sale only purchased the equity of redemption in the one field; and the defendant, who now stood in G's shoes with notice of the plaintiff's claim, although he might possibly be entitled to redeem the whole nine fields comprised in the mortgage, was bound to deliver possession to the plaintiff (the mortgagee) until that was done. The mortgaged property could not be sold by the receiver without the consent of the plaintiff (the mortgagee) or paying him off. S. 356 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1852) no doubt contemplates the payment of debts secured by mortgage out of the proceeds of the conversion of the insolvent's property in priority to the general creditors; but this must be taken in connection with s. 354, and must be understood as referring to those cases in which the mortgaged premises have been sold after coming to an understanding with the mortgagee. *SHRIDHAR NARAYAN v. accruing during the time of his insolvency and likely to continue, even if such income be from sources such that it could not be attached, it ought very seriously to consider whether under such circumstances it ought to exercise its power to dis-

XX of the Code of Civil Procedure. He was opposed by a judgment-creditor, who, inter alia, contended that the insolvent should be compelled to contribute out of his income towards the payment of his debts. The Court, finding that there were no assets, and holding that such income was not properly capable of being attached, and that it had no power to order an insolvent to pay anything out of future earnings towards the discharge of his debts declared the applicant an insolvent and granted him his discharge. Held, that the Court had power to withhold the discharge until the insolvent had satisfied it, by payments on account of his debts, that he really desired to discharge his debts, and that, under the circumstances of the case, both having regard to the fact that the inquiry into the estate of the insolvent had been insufficient, and to the fact that he was in a position to contribute out of his income towards the payment of his debts, the order was wrong and should be set aside. Before default was made in the repayment of the loan, P & Co were declared insolvent under the Insolvency Act, 9 Geo. IV, c. 73, by the 30th section of which it was declared that where there had been mutual credit given by the insolvents and any other person, one debt or demand might be set off against the other; and that all such debts as might be proved under a commission of bankruptcy in England might be proved in the same manner under the Indian Insolvency Act. At the time of the adjudication of insolvency the Bank were also holders of two promissory notes of P & Co which they had discounted for them before the transaction of the loan and the agreement as to deposit of the Company's paper. The time for repayment of the loan having expired, the Bank sold the Company's paper, the proceeds of which, after satisfying the principal and interest due on the loan, produced a considerable surplus. A person may become insolvent a second time before he has received his final discharge under the first insolvency. Morgan v. Knight, 33 L. J. (C.P.) 168, followed. The appellant had been adjudicated an insolvent at the instance of a creditor, under s. 9 of the Indian Insolvency Act (11 and 12 Vict., c. 21), on the 21st January, 1893. On the 4th October, 1900, one of his creditors obtained a rule calling upon the insolvent to show cause why he should not forthwith proceed with the matter. The Commissioner made the rule absolute, and directed the insolvent forthwith to proceed with the matter of his insolvency. On appeal: Held, that the order of the lower Court should be reversed, and the rule discharged. When a person himself files a petition in insolvency, he has the carriage of it. He must serve notices on the creditors at his own expense, and bring the petition to a hearing. But when a person has been adjudicated an insolvent at the instance of a creditor, it is for the petitioning creditor to serve notices, but it is still the duty of the insolvent to attend when required, and point out the persons who are to be served. *DOSA GOPAL v. The Official Assignee conveyed a house forming part of the family property of the insolvent to the plaintiff, who now sued for possession. M's widow died in 1886, and after her death the plaintiff sued to redeem the property from the mortgage. Held, that at the date of his insolvency, M's widow being then alive, the interest of B as reversionary heir in the said property was only a spes successionis, which could not vest in the Official Assignee. in Bombay—Court can order commission to examine insolvent at Shanghai. The firm of T. and Co. filed their petition to insolvency to Bombay on 29th April 1907 at which time one of the partners M was at Shanghai. M subsequently swore his petition at Shanghai on 16th October 1907. On 16th March 1907 certain creditors of the firm obtained an order directing M to appear before the Court of Insolvent Debtors at Bombay to be examined under section 36 of the Indian Insolvency Act. A Rule nisi was obtained on behalf of M calling upon the opposing creditors to show cause why the above order should not be set aside. These creditors also obtained a Rule nisi calling on M to show cause why he should not deliver up to the Official Assignee goods belonging to the insolvent firm in his possession at Shanghai. These two Rules were heard together. Held, that the property of the insolvent debtor's firm in Shanghai vested in the Official Assignee of the Insolvent Debtors' Court at Bombay, and that Court could order M to hand over such property to the Official Assignee in Bombay. Held, further, that the Insolvent Debtors' Court at Bombay can order the examination of a witness at Shanghai, but cannot direct a witness to come to Bombay to be examined, there being no machinery for that purpose. *In re NAOROJI SORABJI T. & CO. It was not therefore necessary for plaintiff to prove the character of each debt or the existence of family necessity. In cases in which s. 7 of the Indian Insolvent Debtors Act applies, the vesting order vests in the Official Assignee only the real and personal estate and effects of the insolvent. Not every gomastah stands in this respect in the same relation to his employer, there being a difference in the degree of control exercised by different owners. The gomastah may be only an ordinary manager or he may represent the firm entirely. It is a question of fact in each case whether the gomastah

The gomastah had withdrawn to his own apartment in the house occupied by the firm, but how this would defeat or delay creditors, some of whom visited him there, was not shown. Other acts before the arrival of the principal were done, by none amounted to departure with intent or to departure at all. Held, that the gomastah, even if he had departed from the place of business with the intent to defeat or delay creditors, was not in such a position as that he had authority rendering his principal liable to be adjudged insolvent. On the 23rd June, 1893, one Vishram Meghji, the owner of a flour mill, mortgaged all the machinery engines, plant, stock, implements, utensils, trade fixtures, chattels and effects specified in schedule annexed to the deed of mortgage, to the plaintiff, for Rs. 9,000 then advanced, and power was given to the plaintiff to sell the same in default of payment. In March, 1893, Vishram Meghji became insolvent, and his estate thereupon vested in the Official Assignee. The plaintiff claimed the mortgaged property, but the Official Assignee contended that under s. 23 of the Indian Insolvency Act (11 and 12 Vict., c. 21), he was entitled to it as property which with the consent of the true owner was in the possession, order or disposition of the insolvent at the date of insolvency. The property was sold by consent, and the plaintiff brought this suit to recover the proceeds. From the evidence it

Bombay with which he had had dealings. The grounds of opposition were as follows:—(i) Reckless speculation; (ii) contracting debts without any reasonable expectation, at the time when the same were contracted, of paying the same; (iii) gross misconduct in contracting debts; (iv) conceal-creditors or of giving an undue preference to creditors, having discharged a debt due by the insolvent. It appeared that down to the end of 1889 there was nothing in the dealings of the firm to which objection could be taken. In the first half of the year 1890 the insolvent must have sustained heavy loss, as his mercantile assets over liabilities, which on the 31st December 1889 were Rs 50,794, were on the 30th June 1890 reduced to Rs 2,29,612. The charges, however, against the in-

of gross misconduct in contracting debts, having no reasonable or probable expectation, at the time when they were contracted of paying them, and 16 lakhs, and had on hand large forward contracts which then showed a further probable loss. In that position he entered into further large speculative sales of exchange. He had then no assets with which to meet any loss. (iii) As to the fourth should examine the insolvent's position, etc. It was understood and arranged that in the meantime no steps should be taken against the insolvent, and that he should keep his affairs in statu quo. The insolvent, however, swore that he understood he was to make no large payments, but that he was to keep the firm going. During that week the insolvent paid Rs. 1,191 due on a bill to one of the Banks and Rs. 472 on re-draft account, a few insignificant current expenses and Rs. 1,000 to his solicitors, who were preparing a trust-deed to be earned before the creditors. The Court was of opinion that the conduct of the insolvent in making these payments did not amount to the offence charged in the fifth ground of opposition, viz., obtaining preference from the opposing creditors by making false representations to them. (v) As to the sixth ground, that it was not established. On the 14th March the insolvent in answer to enquiries, had assured the manager of the Chartered Bank that his firm was quite sound and solvent, it being then to his knowledge hopelessly insolvent. On that day the manager accepted the insolvent's bills for £50,000 for which security was given, and subsequently the insolvent sold one of his own bills for £10,000 to the Bank. This, however, was in pursuance of a previous contract. The evidence of the manager showed that it was because of this contract, and not because of the false representation of the insolvent, that he purchased the draft for £10,000. The Court was of opinion that the transaction did not come within s. 50. (vi) As to the seventh ground (undue preference) that it was not proved. On the 16th April 1891, the day but one before the insolvent held a meeting of his creditors, he sent Rs. 5,000 to Messrs. Elliott & Sons in England. That firm had accepted bills of the insolvent which he was bound to take up, but the earliest did not fall due until the 20th May 1891. His practice had been to remit money a day or two before bills became due. The Court was of opinion that the transaction was not an undue preference within s. 50. It was, no doubt, a voluntary payment, but it was not shown to be a fraudulent discharge of a debt within the section. A mere voluntary payment of a debt is not within the purview of the mere fact of a voluntary payment, fraud of a penal nature cannot be inferred. Here nothing more was proved than a voluntary payment by a man in in-intent of giving an undue preference. Where an undue preference is made penal, the Court must be satisfied that the guilty intention necessary to constitute the offence existed in the mind of the insolvent, and ought not to assume it unless the circumstances point to no other probable conclusion. The release by an insolvent of a debt due to him without receiving payment would undoubtedly fall within the scope of s. 50 of the Insolvent Act. In the matter of HORMAN ANDRAN HORMAN

An order was made by the Insolvent Court adjudging an insolvent on the petition of certain of his creditors. He appealed against the order the petitioning creditors being the respondents named on the record. When the appeal came on for hearing, the said respondents did not appear, and it was alleged that the appellant had settled with them, in order to induce them to withdraw from the appeal. Another creditor, whose name was in the insolvent's schedule, thereupon applied to be heard in the appeal in support of the order of adjudication, and if necessary that his name should be entered on the record as respondent. summons by J. to the firm, and by making false entries therein of payments by J. Whilst the charge was pending, the Presidency Magistrate, before whom the charge had been made, granted a search-warrant in the following terms: "To Inspector M.—Whereas J. and another have been charged before me with the commission or suspected commission of the offence of cheating, and it has been made to appear to me that the production of khatta books for the years 1882 to 1887 is essential to the enquiry now being made, or about to be made, into the said offence or suspected offence, this is to authorize and require you to search for the said property in the house of J., No. 11 Pollock Street, and if found to produce the same forthwith before this Court." In execution of the warrant, certain books and papers found in the house of J. were seized and taken possession of by the police, and of those books and papers the Magistrate on the application of the prosecution, made an order for inspection. On a rule granted by the High Court to show cause why the order for inspection should not be set aside, it was contended that the search-warrant had been granted without proper judicial inquiry and upon insufficient materials, that it was bad on the face of it as it did not "specify clearly," as directed in Form VIII, sch. V of the Criminal Procedure Code, whose khatta books were to be produced; and that there was nothing in the criminal law to enable a Court to make an order for inspection of documents by the prosecution in a criminal case. Hall, per Nunnis, J., that, assuming the contention as to the search warrant arose on the rule as granted, the warrant must be in a person justly or reasonably believed to be guilty of a crime being brought to justice and in a prosecution once commenced being determined in due course of law," a right to inspect such property must exist, as well as a right to seize and detain it and the proper persons to inspect it are those conducting the prosecution. It would, moreover, be unreasonable that the police or those conducting the prosecution should not have an opportunity of inspecting and examining documents, etc., found on a prisoner when arrested, or on his premises at the time of, or subsequent to, his arrest, before tendering them in evidence. Per Gossz, J.—The contention as to the validity of the search-warrant did not arise on the rule as granted, but semble that the search-warrant was bad in law, no summons under s. 91 of the Criminal Procedure Code having been, in the first instance, issued for the production of the documents, and there being no evidence to show that they would not be produced on summons, only, that although the warrant was not specific still, inasmuch as no objection was raised to the form of the warrant before the Magistrate, and the accused had not been prejudiced by reason of the specification of the documents being somewhat indistinct, and it was clear what was really meant, the objection as to the form of the warrant should be disallowed. Per Gossz, J.—There is no doubt that by the criminal law of this country, as laid down in the Criminal Procedure Code since 1861, an accused person may be compelled to furnish evidence, the production of which might have the effect of criminating him. The Magistrate has to determine at the time when he makes an order under s. 91 of the Criminal Procedure Code, or issues a search warrant under s. 90, whether the documents are necessary for the inquiry; but when they are brought into Court, the inspection should not rest with the Magistrate who does not prosecute and has no interest one way or the other in the result of the prosecution. It is reasonable that those who conduct the prosecution should have such inspection, for the production of such documents is for the purpose of using them in evidence, and this could not be done unless the prosecution had an opportunity of inspecting them. In the

any document or thing is seized and brought before the Court, it seems that the Legislature, while providing for the seizure and production in Court of documents, etc., intended by implication that the prosecution should, under the order of the Court, have the power to inspect them, and determine whether they should go in as evidence.

This application was refused. Subsequently, the accused, through a third person, cashed five of these notes, whereupon a second application was made under s. 94 by the prosecution for the production of the notes or their proceeds as against accused and such third person. The Magistrate granted summonses on the accused and on such third person for the production of ten notes, but declined to grant a summons for such third person for the proceeds of the five notes cashed. The accused produced five of these notes which were in his possession or power; the third person, however, stating that he had in his power five of the notes mentioned in the summons, claimed a lien on the same, and the Magistrate refused to make an order for the production of the same.

inasmuch as a lien had been claimed on them, and that he was of opinion that the proceeds of the notes cashed, not being specific objects, did not come within the purview of s. 94. Held, that the Magistrate's order must be set aside. In the matter of the Nizam of Hyderabad v. JACOB thereof and to dig excavations for the purpose of exposing the foundations, it was objected by the plaintiff that the Court had no jurisdiction to make the order, as the house of which inspection was sought was not the "subject of the suit" within s. 499 of the Civil Procedure Code, and that, if the order could be made for inspection of the house, it could not be made for inspection of the house, including the zenana apartments, and further that no order could be made for the excavation of the foundations. Held, that the house and premises of the plaintiff formed the "subject of the suit" within the meaning of s. 499, and under that section the Court had power to make the order applied for. Held, also, that this was a case in which the order should be made. *DHORONEY DEUR GHOSE v. 1. ——— Civil Procedure

Code (Act XIV of 1883), s. 210—Power of High Court to make its money decrees payable by instalments Under s. 210 of the Civil Procedure Code this Court has the power to make its money decrees payable by instalments. Per CURRIE. The general impression prevailing in the minds of money lenders in Bombay, as echoed in the plaintiff's affidavit, that in all cases they can defeat the provisions of the Code as to payment by instalments and get a decree for immediate payment by avoiding the Small Causes Court and coming to this Court, is erroneous and needs to be corrected. *POMA

that the plaintiff was bound by the terms of the contract between G and the company. That it was not open to the plaintiff to show that G did not state what under his own signature he declared to be true, and yet to hold the company liable on the policy blushing aside and treating as of no import whatever the statements and representations which form the basis of the contract. That the misstatements and misrepresentations made by G were amply sufficient to warrant the company in avoiding the policy. New York Life Insurance Co. v. Gampel; 11 L. R. 27 Cal. 593

5. — Age of assured—Proof of age—Onus of proof—Mistake in statement of age—Fraud. A insured his life with the defendant company. By the terms of the policy the declaration of the assured as to his age was made the basis of the contract, and the policy was issued, subject to the express condition that, in case any statement contained in the declaration were untrue, the policy should be void. The assurance was also expressly made, subject to the regulations and conditions contained in the prospectus of the company. The prospectus contained the following provision with regard to the age of parties insured: "Age admitted in the company's policies in all cases where proof is given satisfactory to the directors. Proof of age can be furnished at any time, if not furnished, it will be necessary on settlement of claim," and after stating the nature of the "evidence as to age," which the company would accept, the prospectus continued: "The directors recommend applicants to furnish any of the above as soon as possible and get the age admitted in the policy, as it is required by all soundly conducted companies on settlement of claim if not previously produced." disclosed nothing more than an innocent mistake as to age on the part of the assured, the policy would not be vitiated. Subject to the above terms of the prospectus, any untruth in the declaration as to the age of the assured would vitiate the contract. The statement as to the age of the assured amounts to a warranty, and the warranty being broken, the risk under the policy would not attach. *ORIENTAL GOVERNMENT SECURITY LIFE ASSURANCE CO. v. In September, 1898, the defendant company issued a policy for the sum proposed for, which recited that I had delivered a statement in writing declaring, inter alia, that his age on his next birthday would not exceed fifty-eight years, and contained the proviso that the policy was issued upon the express condition that in case any statement or allegation contained in that declaration should be untrue, or if the assurance thereby made should have been made through any misrepresentation or concealment, the policy should be void. In September, 1899, I died, and plaintiff, his nephew, claimed from defendants the amount due under the policy. Defendants refused to pay, on the ground, inter alia, that the policy had been obtained by fraudulent misrepresentations

as to the age, means and circumstances of the assured. The evidence showed that the age of the assured was from three to four years greater than he had declared it to be: Held, that the defendants were not liable on the policy. Held, also, that the plaintiff was not entitled, under s. 65 of the Contract Act, to a refund of premium paid on the policy during the lifetime of the assured. In the "personal statement" referred to, the assured had omitted to disclose the fact that two sisters had predeceased him. The clause in the personal statement relating to the "knowledge and belief" of the assured did not qualify the warranty there given; there was no real ambiguity, and, in consequence, the warranty as to age was an absolute one and not merely a warranty of his belief as to his age. Also, that a statement as to plaintiff's age, made by his sister, was admissible in evidence after her decease, under s. 32 (5) of the Evidence Act, the date of birth being the commencement of a relationship by blood, and therefore relating to the existence of such relationship, within the meaning of the section. Ram Chandra Dutt v. Jogeswar Narain Deo, I. L. R. 20 Cal. 758, followed. The defendant company's prospectus contained a condition that evidence of age of an assured would be required to be furnished in every case before a claim under a policy would be paid; and recommended assurers to provide evidence of age as soon as possible, as it was required on settlement of claim if not previously produced. Semle. That the effect of the condition was to throw upon the assured or his representatives the onus of proving the correctness of the age as warranted by the assured. Also, that it was unnecessary to prove that the company's prospectus had been read by or specially brought to the notice of the assured, apart

An open cover to an amount stated for insurance on cargo to be shipped for a voyage in a ship (afterwards lost on that voyage) was given by the agent of the defendant company to the owner of the ship in order that he might give it to the charterer, and it was a proposal to insure. The owner transferred the open cover to the plaintiff, who, under charter with him, shipped rice and applied for policies to the amount stated in the open cover. The defendants' agent then refused to issue any policy on the rice so shipped. Held, that the open cover, as given to the owner, constituted a subsisting proposal to insure, and as soon as application for the policy under it was made to the defendants' agent by the shipper, to whom the open cover had

4. — Particular average loss—Liability of underwriters. action upon a policy of marine insurance the evidence given with respect to the loss of the ship was as follows: "The vessel grounded near Barks. After the vessel struck, the water constantly broke right over all. . . . The cargo was all under water. The labourers were only able to work at ebb tide, and at high tide they could only see the top of the vessel's masts. . . . The vessel lay where she stranded seven days, and was then raised with ease." Some of the goods on board were insured by a policy which contained the clause "warranted free of particular average, unless sunk or burnt." It was contended for the plaintiffs that the ship had "sunk," and that the damage to the goods was therefore covered by the policy. Held, that where a vessel runs aground and lists over, and is in consequence covered by the high tide, which causes damage to goods on board, it cannot be said that she has "sunk," within the meaning of the word as used in a policy of insurance, and therefore that a claim for particular average cannot be sustained under a clause in the policy—"warranted free of particular average, unless sunk or burnt." *Latham v. Policies of insurance between natives of India (those, at least, which do not contain the words "Interest or no interest") are to be construed in the same way as such instruments have been uniformly construed by the general law merchant in Western Europe, viz., as contracts of indemnity. A certain trade is carried on between native merchants in Western India with the coasts of Africa and Madagascar by means of native vessels which leave the Indian ports early in the year, and after remaining in the ports of Africa and Madagascar for four or five months, leave on the return voyage about August or September. This trade consists in shipping goods at the Indian ports, to be disposed of at the African and Madagascar ports and purchasing with the proceeds fresh goods to be similarly disposed of in the home ports. To enable traders to embark in this venture, it is their practice to borrow money of merchants on what is termed "avang," that is, money borrowed on the condition that it is not to be repaid except in case of the success of the voyage. Insurable interest—Meaning of the words "lost or not lost" in a policy.

8. ————— Covering note—Concealment of material fact. On the 15th March 1897, the plaintiff, who was a shipper of salt, applied for and obtained from the defendants' company in Bombay a preliminary covering note for Rs1,000 for salt to be shipped by him from Bombay to Calcutta. The policy in complete receipt of salt from said shipper was at Ura in native

Upon this policy the plaintiff sued to recover the value of the lost salt, viz., Rs4,360. 11. ————— Repairs to ship—Deduction of one-third new for old. It appeared on evidence that a ship was not by the repairs done to her put in a better condition than she had been in before sustaining the damage which constituted the partial loss. Held, that the rule, by which a deduction of one-third new for old is calculated in favour of the insurers who pay for the repairs, did not apply. *SEEDICH GHOSAL v. On appeal in same case:—Held, the rule allowing one-third "new for old" in cases of insurances on ships is not inflexible; therefore, where the ship insured was not worth repairing, and was not in fact repaired, it was held that one-third "new for old" ought not to be allowed. *ARCAR v. In proceeding up the river Hooghly, in charge of a pilot on the 30th April, the vessel grounded on the Rungtulla Sand, heeled over, and lay imbedded in the sand. Endeavours were made unsuccessfully to get her off. On 5th May, Lloyd's surveyor inspected the vessel, and reported that considering her position, the state of the tide at that season, and the expense of getting her off, it was unadvisable to go to further expense in doing so; and that the cost of repairs would, in all probability, amount to much more than the value of the ship when repaired. Some of the sleepers had been then jettisoned, and the surveyor recommended that the vessel and cargo should be abandoned and sold by public auction to the highest bidder. Attempts were made, but unsuccessfully, to get some of the cargo off, and the sleepers were of such a quality that they would not float. The consignees accordingly caused the ship and cargo to be sold by public auction in Calcutta on 12th May. No notice of abandonment was given. The sleepers realized the sum of Rs 450. The purchaser hired boats and began unloading the ship; he unloaded 78 sleepers in all. On 14th May the ship floated off and came up the river, with the rest of the cargo, in safety, proving not to be so much damaged as was supposed. In an action on the policy of insurance:—Held, that there was not such a total loss of the cargo as entitled the plaintiffs to recover as for a total loss without giving notice of abandonment. Held, on appeal, per PHAR and MACPHERSON, JJ.—The plaintiffs failed to prove any necessity for the sale of the ship, or that it was impracticable to convey the sleepers, or a material portion of them, to their destination. But if the insured were legally justified in abandoning and claiming as for a total loss, notice of abandonment ought to have been given. The condition and behaviour of the ship when she got off the shoal should be looked at as indicating her real state and strength while she was on it. Per PHAR, J.—Considering upon the evidence of the circumstances at the time of the sale, that the ship was not worth repairing, and that she was expected to sink at any time, the sale of her was justifiable. The sale of the cargo was also justifiable; it could not have been carried, in a mercantile sense, on shore, much less to its destination. The sale caused a total loss, and there was no need for notice of abandonment. EAST INDIAN RAILWAY COMPANY v. AUSTRALASIAN INSURANCE COMPANY

no contract was made. A childless person, since deceased, expressed to the father of the minor son of his sister his intention to make the boy his heir, and that if he, the intending donor, should have children of his own, he would give the boy a share of his property. The father assented and made over charge of the boy. The widows and mother of the deceased taking his estate for their lives, admitted the boy to joint possession with them, and, on being sued by the rever-sioners of the family estate expectant upon their deaths, defendant, as co-defendants with the boy on the ground that had, in obedience to the known wishes of the deceased, recognized the boy as heir to him Held, that the reversioners could only be deprived of the inheritance after the death of the widows, who could not transfer any estate to last beyond their own lives, by the act of the deceased in contracting with the father of the boy to make the boy the heir, if such contract had been made. And that the substantial question was whether the representations made between the two had amounted to a contract to that effect. On evidence wholly oral, it was found that no such contract had been made. Only enough had been said between the two to give rise to the expectation on either side that the boy would, the then intended course being followed, get the inheritance.

3. — Arrears of rent—Act X of 1859, s. 20—Direction of Court. The enactment of s. 30 of Act X of 1859, that arrears of rent, unless otherwise provided by written agreement, shall be liable to interest at 12 per cent. per annum, does not make it imperative on the Court to award interest in a decree for arrears of rent, but the Court has a discretion in awarding interest in such a case. In an ordinary suit for rent, the question whether the rent is fixed or variable is not involved. DECKWITH v. KISHTO JEEBUN BUCKSHEE

4. — Prolongation of rent suit by tenant. In a suit for seven years' arrears of rent it appeared that the plaintiff had previously sued and been non-suited, and that the tenant had protracted the proceedings. Held, that the Court ought to award interest on the arrears. RAMJEEBUX BOSE v. TRIPPOORA DOSSES Marsh. 398; 2 Hay 449

5. — Withholding rents. Where rents are withheld, interest may be given whether it is provided for in the pottah or not. LALLA SHEO SAHAY SINGH v. KUMHONUSSA BEGUM . 2 W. R., Act X, 68

7. — Agreed instalments of rent. Interest may be decreed with arrears of rent, but it should not be decreed upon instalments of rent as from dates during the currency of the year, unless the parties had agreed that the rent should be paid by instalments at those dates. In a suit in which a decree is given for arrears of rent at an enhanced rate, interest is to be allowed not only from the date of the decree, but from the time the rent became due. ANUSOOLLAH v. KAJEE AFTABOODDEEN 1 L. R. 4 Calc. 594 3 C. L. R. 382

11. ———— Discretion of Court.

Every arrear of rent, unless it is otherwise provided by an agreement in writing, is liable to bear interest at 12 per cent from the time when it, or each instalment of it, became due. The discretion which a Court has to refuse interest can only be exercised upon very clear grounds. The mere non-enforcement by a landlord, even for a series of years, of his right to interest upon arrears of rent does not amount to a waiver of such right. JOHNOBY LALL v. BULLAR LALL 1 L. of 1869, s. 21—Discretion of Court In suits for arrears of rent, a Court of Justice is not bound in every instance to award interest at 12 per cent, the rate specified in Bengal Act VIII of 1869, s. 21, but has discretion either to disallow interest altogether, or to reduce the rate according to the circumstances of each case. Where a plaintiff sought to recover more than what was actually due, and it did not appear that defendant would have refused payment if the sum actually due had been demanded, the Court reduced the rate of

In execution of a decree for rent against a tenant who held under a kabuliat, dated March 1880, the plaintiff put up the tenure for sale and the defendant purchased it on the 20th November 1891. Subsequently, a suit for rent with interest at 225 per cent. per annum specified in the kabuliat executed by the former tenant was brought by the plaintiff against the defendant. The defence was that the plaintiff was not entitled to interest at such a high rate. Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover interest at the rate claimed, it being an exorbitant one and not an ordinary incident of a tenancy. Held, also, that in such a case the rule relating to hard and unconscionable bargains should apply. KARINA SANDHU CHAUDHARI v. A stipulation for payment of interest upon arrears of rent is an ordinary incident of tenancy in this country, unless there is something unusual in the stipulation; and as a rule it attaches to the tenancy, so that a purchaser of the tenancy will also be bound by the stipulation. When a tenure is advertised for sale in execution of a decree for arrears of rent it is not necessary for the decree-holder to specify the rate of interest in the sale proclamation. Where in a lease the stipulation was that the lessee should pay a sum of ten rupees in default of delivery to the landlord of a certain quantity of molasses: Held, that it was merely a personal covenant by the lessee. There was no agreement between the parties to pay interest. The first Court dismissed the claim as to interest; but the lower Appellate Court allowed interest on the amount of the deposit from the date of the demand by plaintiff to the date of payment. The parties to the suit were Hindus governed by the law of Mitakshara. Held, under special circumstances, that interest may be awarded by Courts in India, by way of damages. Held, further, that under Hindu law as it is to be found in the Mitakshara there is annexed to each contract of debt, in which there is no agreement to pay interest, the term or incident that such loss shall be made up by the debtor, if he wrongfully withholds payment after demand; and that this incident was annexed to every such contract at the date when the Interest Act (No XXXII of 1839) came into force. Held further, that the plaintiff's claim was for the period after that date; and that limitation barred recovery of money by way of damages for a breach of the contract. Held, that the Courts below had erred as to the effect of the contract, and that there had been a failure to regard the intention shown by the conditions in the mortgage-deed above mentioned, the High Court appearing to have acted on a fixed rule of construction, laid down for transactions of this kind, instead of arriving at the meaning of the deed by an examination of its terms. By the true construction of the contract when the whole of it was considered, the creditor was entitled to payment of the principal with interest at the rate stated in the deed for the entire period of non-payment. This should be down to the date of the decree of the first Court. In the decree should be added interest from its date till payment at six per cent. per annum. Even supposing the construction put by the Courts below to have been correct, the creditor still might have recovered six years' arrears of interest by way of damages notwithstanding limitation. Payments made by the debtor had been appropriated by the creditor to payment of the interest on the bond bearing simple interest, while the compound interest, on the other hand, had been left to accumulate. The creditor sued the representative of the debtor, after his decease, to enforce the mortgage bearing compound interest. The Transfer of Property Act, 1882, was in force when the suit was instituted, but not when the relation of debtor and creditor between the parties commenced. Held, assuming that a discretionary power to a Court remained under a 209, Civil Procedure Code, to decree interest to run, at less than the contract rate, in a suit commenced before Act IV of 1882 became law, still the best guide to discretion in this case was to be found in s. 86 of that Act, which required the Courts to decree mortgage-debts with interest at the rate provided by the mortgagee (if to that rate no valid legal objection could be taken) down to the date fixed for realization. *RAMESWAR KOER v. Unreasonable condition—Penalty. A mortgage-deed contained a condition that, if the principal were not repaid by a certain day, the mortgage should only be redeemed by payment of one mura of rice for each rupee of the mortgage-money. The mortgagee was in possession under a prior Madarawa mortgage, and rice rose in the market. Held, that the condition was unreasonable, and such as should not be enforced in equity. MAILARAYA v. SERRARAYA BURT . . . . . 1 Mad. 81

6. Penalty. A bond stipulated for payment of principal and interest at one per cent. per mensem within six months from the date of the bond, and in default that the rate of interest should be raised to six and a quarter per cent. per mensem. Held, that the higher rate of interest was not in the nature of a penalty, and that the plaintiff had a right to enforce payment thereof. *ARULU MASTRY v. 7. Promissory note payable by instalments—Penalty. Where a promissory note payable by instalments stipulated for interest at two per cent. per mensem, and in default of punctual payment, that interest be charged at one anna per rupee per mensem from the date of the note, it was held that this increased rate of interest was a penalty which might be relieved from on payment of the lower rate. *RAJAJI BIN DAYLJI v. 8. Penalty. A promissory note, payable two months after date, given for money lent and interest in advance at the rate of 12½ per cent. per mensem, contained an agreement to continue to pay that rate of interest after the due date if the money was not then repaid. Held, that the high rate of interest so agreed to be paid did not constitute a penalty against which the Courts would relieve. *HAHEMA MAJI v. 9. Instalments—Penalty—Liquidated damages. A executed an instalment-bond for Rs. 1,000 in favour of B, in which he stipulated that from the year 1271 (1864) to 1275 (1868), both inclusive, Rs. 200 should be paid in the month of Jaishta (May 13th to June 12th) in each year, and that "in the event of any instalment being then due, all the remaining instalments should be deemed lapsed, and the principal should be paid with interest at the rate of 10 per cent. per mensem, from the date of the instalment-bond." The first instal-

of the bond. The further instalment due in Jaishta 1274 and 1275 (May 13th to June 12th, 1867 and 1868) were never paid. On 13th Kartick 1275 (30th October 1868) B sold the bond and all his interest thereunder to C for Rs. 800. On 2nd Jaishta 1276 (11th May 1868) C brought a suit against A for the whole amount of the bond with interest thereon at 10 per cent. per mensem, from the date thereof till the date of suit, namely, Rs. 6,093, less the amount Rs. 600, which had been realized by B in the three instalments for 1271, 1272, and 1273 (1864, 1865, and 1866). The Judge awarded him only the amounts of the unpaid instalments for 1274 and 1275 (1867 and 1868), namely, Rs. 400 with interest from the date of the instalments till date of suit at one per cent. per mensem, in all Rs. 488 odd, proportionate costs and interest on all at one per cent. per mensem till date of realization. On appeal to the High Court by C—Held, that the clause in the bond relied on was a mere penalty clause. The original obligor of the bond having waived the exaction of any penalty, C was not entitled to more than the Judge had awarded him. BOLEY DOBERY v. SIDESWAR RAO BABOO ROY KUR

"should I fail to pay the principal and interest as agreed upon, I shall pay interest at 4 per cent. per mensem from the date of this bond to that of liquidation." The defendant made default in payment. Held, in a suit brought on the bond, that the stipulation in the bond, for the payment of interest at 4 per cent. per mensem was in the nature of a penalty, and the plaintiff was only entitled to recover interest at a reasonable rate. date of the bond to the date of suit at the rate of 3 per cent. per mensem being claimed, subject to the deduction of the interest paid. Regarding the rate of interest stipulated in default as a penal rate, the Court, seeing that the debt was secured by a mortgage of property and that the rate of interest ordinarily payable was somewhat high, considered it sufficient to award the plaintiff 20 per cent. per annum to commence from the expiry of eight months from the date of the bond. BHARAT LAL v. 19. — Promissory note
Stipulation to pay interest at high rate on default in payment of note—Penalty—Contract Act, s. 74
 The defendant and one D, on the 6th April 1875, gave to the plaintiff, a money-lender, a promissory note, by which they jointly and severally promised to pay the plaintiff on the 6th September R400 "for value received in cash in hand paid on signing and delivering this bond; should we neglect or fail to pay this amount on due date, then only shall it carry interest from and on due date to date of payment at the defaulting rate of 10 per cent. per mensem." At the date of the note, the defendant and D were in the plaintiff's debt in respect of other promissory notes and a sum of R100 was deducted from the amount of the note of the 6th April in respect of one of these which was given up and in respect of interest on three others. A further sum of R125 was deducted as interest in advance for the five months previous to the due date of the note, and the balance (R175) was paid by cheque to D. D died before the note became due. In a suit

Act did not apply. The stipulation to pay interest at the "defaulting rate" was not in the nature of a penalty. Held, that, looking at the nature action, the rate of interest being exorbitant and the consideration inadequate, the transaction was not one which ought to be enforced by a Court of equity. MACKINTOSH v. HUNT . . . . . I. L. R. 2 Cal. 202 moneys on a certain date and for the payment of interest on such moneys at R1-12 per cent. per mensem, stipulating to pay the interest six-monthly and in default "to pay compound interest in future." Held, (i) that the stipulation to pay compound interest could not be regarded as a penal one, and (ii) that the bond contained an agreement to pay interest after the due date at the rate payable before that date, and that, if it had been otherwise, the obligee was entitled to interest after that date at that rate, such rate not being unreasonable. MATHURA PRASAD v. 22. — High rate of interest—Penalty. The obligors of a bond agreed to pay the principal amount by instalments without interest, and in case of default to pay interest at the rate of R3-2 per cent. per mensem, and hypothecated immovable property as security for the payment of the bond-debt, sufficient for the discharge of the debt, and furnished a surety. Held by STUART C.J., in a suit on the bond, that the principal amount being payable in the first instance without interest, the stipulation to pay interest at the rate of R3-2 per cent. per mensem in case of default was a penal one, and reasonable interest should only be allowed. Held by SPANKIE, J., that, looking at all the circumstances of the case, the very high rate of interest imposed in case of default should be regarded as penal, and should be reduced. The Court under the circumstances allowed interest at the rate of 1 rupee per cent. per mensem. CHUGHAN MAL v. MIN . . . . . I. L. R. 2 All. 715

23. — Penalty. The defendants, on the 8th May 1869, gave the plaintiff a bond for the payment of R2,000 on the 16th February 1870. This amount consisted of two items, viz., R1,650 principal and R350 interest in advance at the rate of two per cent. per mensem for the period between the date of the bond and its due date. The bond provided that, in default of payment on the due date, interest on the whole amount of R2,000 should be paid at the rate of two per cent. per mensem from the date of the bond. Held, in a suit on the bond in which interest was claimed at the rate of two per cent. per mensem from the date of the bond, that this provision was penal, and the penalty ought not to be enforced. MAZHAR ALI KHAN v. In the event of default, he shall pay interest at R1 per diem. Held, that, looking to the whole instrument, it was equitable to hold that the term "interest" was not intended to mean interest in the strict sense of that term, but a penalty, term security. In a suit on the bond the obligee, the obligor having failed to pay any interest, claimed interest from the date the bond became due to the date of institution of the suit at 17-8-0, the defaulting rate. Held, following the principle laid down in Hansidhar v. Bu Ali Khan, I. L. R. 3 All. 200, that the provisions of the bond, as regards the rate of interest payable on default of the payment of interest, were in their nature penal and excessive; that, as a matter of equity, they should not be enforced. Held, also, with reference to the question what was a reasonable amount of compensation for the obligor to pay for breach of contract, that unpaid interest should bear interest at the rate of 11-1-0 per cent. per annum from the date of default to the date of the High Court's decree. *KUTUBHAR SINGH v. 26. ————— Penalty—Equity relief. By a registered bond for Rs. 500, dated the 4th October 1875, in which immovable property was hypothecated as collateral security, it was provided that the obligor should pay interest at the rate of 11-4-0 per cent. per mensem at the end of every six months, and upon default in the payment of such interest, that he should pay interest at the rate of 12 per cent. per mensem from the date of the bond. The bond also contained a stipulation against alienation, and declared that the principal sum was payable on demand. The obligee sued the obligor upon the bond, claiming to recover the principal sum and interest from the date of the bond for three years eleven months and twenty days, less different sums amounting to Rs. 500 paid only to the interest due on and subsequent to the default, but retrospectively to the date of the bond itself, and should not be awarded, but that reasonable compensation only should be awarded by the obligor's breach of contract in respect of interest.

Accordingly the Court made a decree, giving the obligee interest on the principal sum from the date of the bond to the date of the decree at 11-4-0 per cent. per mensem and compound interest from the date of default in the payment of interest to the date of the decree at the rate of four annas per cent. per mensem by way of damages for such default. *Hansidhar v. 28. ————— Penalty. The obligor of a bond agreed that, if the principal amount were not paid at the end of 12 months with the interest thereon, such interest should be added to the principal, which together should represent the principal sum, until a further year's interest at the original rate had accrued, when the same process should be followed of adding unpaid interest to the principal, and so on until the debt was liquidated. Held, that the stipulation as to the annual capitalization of principal and interest, for the purpose of carrying interest, could not be regarded as removing the transaction from the region of an ordinary contract on a bond under which an obligor was bound by the terms to which he had agreed. SARAY PRASAD v. BINA MAHON I. L. R. 6 ALL 6

29. ————— Penalty. The obligor of bond promised therein to pay the amount on a certain day without interest, and if he made default, to pay the amount with interest at the rate of 12 per cent. per mensem. Held, in a suit on the bond, that such interest was not penal in its character, but contract interest, the liability to pay which was not made contingent on any breach of any part of the contract, and therefore should not have been reduced. *KUPJERAM LAL v. V lent Rs. 500 to C and the members of his family under a bond, by which it was agreed that C's family should demise certain land on kanoori to V and receive a further sum. It was also stipulated in the bond that C and the members of his family should pay interest at 6 per cent. upon Rs. 500 until the execution of the kanoori deed, and interest at 24 per cent. from the date of the loan in the event of their not making the demise. The demise was not made. Held, that the stipulation for the enhanced rate of interest did not create an independent obligation, and that the proper course was to determine what would be a sufficient compensation for the breach of contract. *Vengideswara Puttur v. In May 1893, S (defendant No. 4), a resident at Hissar in the Punjab, consigned 600 bags of rapeseed to K of Bombay, and delivered them to the plaintiff for carriage to Bombay. While the goods were in transit to Bombay, S, the consignor, ordered the plaintiffs to deliver them to his agent F, instead of to the consignee, and on the 15th May F requested delivery from the plaintiffs. Before the goods could be delivered, however, the firm of F D S & Co. (defendants Nos. 1, 2, and 3) claimed them, alleging that they had been assigned to them by K for valuable consideration. The plaintiff thereupon filed this suit, praying that the defendants should be required to interplead, and that they should be restrained from suing them (the plaintiffs) in respect of the said goods. The plaintiffs claimed to charge the goods with payment of freight, wharfage, and demurrage, and their costs of suit. Held, (i) that the suit was properly instituted by the plaintiffs as an interpleader suit so as to entitle them to their costs; (ii) that S, the fourth defendant, was entitled to the goods, subject to the plaintiffs' charges for freight and costs; (iii) that the plaintiffs' charges for wharfage and demurrage could not be allowed. The goods remained in the plaintiffs' possession, not by reason of any neglect or default of the owner.

to be an imitation of the plaintiff's registered design, for a Bombay firm, and also that the design had been sent to the Bombay firm from a firm in London in 1897, that is, before the plaintiff's design was registered, in order that certain of similar design might be manufactured in India and sent back to London for sale. 1. FRAMING AND SETTLING ISSUES.

1. ——— Mode of framing issues—
Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 139, Semble.
Under s. 139 of Act VIII of 1859, the issues were to be framed upon the plaint, written statements, and allegations of the parties or their counsel.

2. ——— Plaint—Written and oral statements. The issues are to be framed from all questions of law or fact upon which the parties may be at issue, and are to be collected, not merely from the plaint, nor from the written statements, but may also be taken from the oral statements of their pleaders. KOWSERLYA DASSER v.

the Court may frame the issues from the oral examination of the parties or their pleaders, notwith-

fact contained in those examinations and the allegafrom the pleadings, but also from the statements of the parties and their pleaders made before the Court.

7. ————— Settlement of Issues—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 139. Issues are to be fixed under s. 139, Code of Civil Procedure, when both parties appear, and the Court can ascertain from them what are the points upon which they are at issue. The Court is not bound to fix any issue when the defendant does not appear, but ought to proceed under s. 111 to hear the case ex parte. AMEER ALI SOWDAGER v. ISHAMOODEEN . . . 15 W. R. 145 or as are essential to support a plea and are denied by the plaintiff. Mere pieces of evidence which are to be adduced to enable the Court to infer the truth of a material averment, ought not to be made the subject of a separate issue; nor should the motives of the plaintiff in bringing the suit be put in issue; for if he have a good cause of action, his motives, as ill-will, pique, etc., would not be an any answer to it. *BIRCH v. 14. ————— Inconsistent issues—Undue influence—Trial of issues. The execution of a hibadama having been denied by the plaintiff, a Mahomedan widow and purdanasheen, in a suit brought by her to have it set aside as fabricated, she also alleged that undue influence had been exercised upon her. It was decided upon the evidence that the instrument was genuine, having been executed by her of her own free will. The above questions being inconsistent with one another, the latter should not have been admitted to form part of an issue together with the former. On an issue of undue influence, rightly raised, a Court should consider whether the gift in question (a) is one which a right-minded person might be expected to make; (b) is or is not an improvident act on the donor's part; (c) is such as to have required advice, if not obtained by the donor; and (d) whether the intention to make the gift originated with the donor, the principles being always the same, although the circumstances may differ. *MAHOMED BUCKER KHAN v. ## 2. FRESH OR ADDITIONAL ISSUES.

1. ————— Raising issues not raised in pleadings—Proceedings against policy or morality. Although a Court may have the right, and is perhaps even under an obligation, to take cognizance motu proprio of any objection manifestly apparent on the face of a proceeding showing that it is against morality or public policy, yet where this is only to be collected from the evidence by inference and is capable of explanation or answer by counter-evidence, it is highly inconvenient, and may lead to the most direct injustice, to enter into the enquiry if the issue has not been presented by the pleadings or the points recorded for proof. FISCEER v. KAMALA NAIKER . . . 3 W. R. P. C. 33; 8 Moo. I. A. 170

2. ————— Question raised at hearing of suit. Held, that the Court was not in its own motion competent to determine a question which was not alleged, nor raised by the pleadings of the parties. But if the question was raised even on the day of the hearing of the case at any time before the decision of the case, the Court ought not to have rejected it, because it was not raised by the written statement, but ought to have framed issues to determine the question. DYASHUNKER v. MAHOMED AMEEN-OD-DEEN KHAN . . . 3 Agra 246

3. — Suit for pre-emption When the plaintiff claimed pre-emption on one ground, and the Court raised an issue as to his right on another ground, to which the parties assented, and the case was decided against him as he had not proved his right on that ground;—Held, that the Court would not interfere with the finding on special appeal. SHEW SUKRY LALL v. 5. — Suit for declaration of title. On the evidence, the defendant wished to raise issues as to the unchastity and inability of the plaintiff to succeed, and as to her share on behalf of another person, not having alleged that she was doing so, neither of which matters were referred to in his written statement; but leave to raise them was refused, and the Court held that the plaintiff was, under the circumstances of the case, entitled to rely on the title given her by the production of the title-deeds in her favour. SWARNAMAYI RAU v. 8. — Amendment of plaint—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, ss. 139-141. In 1817, the ancestor of the plaintiffs had obtained from the zamindar a mawasi istemran lease of a certain portion of his property. In 1837 the entire zamindari was put up to sale for arrears of Government revenue, and was purchased by Government as the highest bidder, who thereupon granted a lease for a term of twenty years to W. This revenue sale was never set aside; but in 1842 the Government restored the estate to the Rajah zamindar with all the prior incumbrances, but subject to his confirming the lease to W. In 1844, the father of the plaintiffs brought a suit to recover possession of their tennah, but the suit was dismissed by the principal Sudder Ameen on the ground that the right to sue had not accrued, and could only arise on the expiration of the lease to W. This judgment was reversed by the Sudder Dewany Adawlut, but was restored and affirmed on appeal by the Judicial Committee. In the meantime, and before the expiry of the lease to W, owing to certain fraudulent transactions on the part of A, who had got into possession of the estate as the purchaser of the interests of certain mortgagees of the Rajah, the property was again put up to sale for arrears of Government revenue, and was purchased by M, a party to the transactions abovementioned. The Rajah, however, succeeded in getting this sale reversed in 1866, and obtained possession of his estate in 1871. In a suit, instituted on the 23rd Octo-

Ameen's decision, confirmed by the Privy Council, was to postpone their right to obtain possession of their tenure, until after the expiration of the lease to W; that when that lease expired, the property was in the possession of M, of the fraudulent character of whose title they had no knowledge and that their right to sue in the present case consequently arose only in 1871. The defence was that the plaintiff disclosed no cause of action; that the cause of action, if any, was barred by the law of limitation; and that the tenure was destroyed by the proceedings connected with the sale in 1837, which was never set aside. The Judge held that the plaintiff disclosed a cause of action which arose in 1837, and that the suit was consequently barred. He accordingly dismissed the suit without taking any evidence. On appeal to the High Court, it was admitted on the part of the plaintiffs that the sale of 1837 was never set aside; but it was contended that the restoration of the zamindari to the zamindar, "with all the former incumbrances," gave rise to an equity of a personal character against the Rajah, and those taking under him with notice of the plaintiffs, title to restore the plaintiffs' tenure, which equity fastened upon him on his obtaining actual possession of the estate; and that therefore the cause of action accrued only in 1871. On the part of the defendants it was objected that the plaintiffs had no right to make equity.

Remunda could not now beset up res. that, under ss. 139 and 141 of the Civil Procedure Code, the plaintiffs might be allowed to amend their case in any stage before a final decision; and inasmuch as if the plaintiffs' case as so amended were proved, the suit would not be barred, it was necessary for the determination of the question of limitation that the case should be remanded to the lower Court for trial. *RAMDIAL KHAN v. Evidence in the latter suit was received in that of the appellant by consent of parties, both suits having been brought against the same defendant, whose title as widow of a son alleged to have been adopted by the last owner was set up in both, but was not proved. Appeals having been filed in both suits, in first brought by the sister's son a new issue was framed by the Appellate Court, under s. 566, Civil Procedure Code, as to whether he was entitled as nearest of kin, or was excluded by the other claimants whose suit was, at that time compromised. Held, that after what had taken place in regard to both suits the Appellate Court could frame this issue, although it was new, and had not been raised in the defendant's written answer. With reference to the evidence in the one suit having been imported as a whole into the other at the first hearing, and the admission of evidence upon the trial of the new issue, Held, that the parties intended that the evidence should be admitted and that no irregularity had taken place materially affecting the decree of the High Court, which dismissed the suit of the sister's son on return made under s. 507. CHAND DIX & NARAINI KEAR.
